Opposition Solidly United Against Radical Candidate

MARSAL RESIGNS

New Executive Is Regarded As Good Friend Of England

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 13.—M. Doumergue, the President of the Senate and former Premier, was today elected President of France.

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 13.—The report that M. Herriot will not accept the Premiership from a President elected with votes from the Right is disposed of by an announcement by friends of M. Herriot that "whoever is elected President M. Herriot will answer his call if he is invited to form a Cabinet."

(Reuter's Service)

Versailles, June 13.—The town and Palace are a hive of excited activity. All roads hither at noon were crowded with motorcars bringing not only Senators and Deputies but many members of Paris society.

A meeting of the Left parties of both Chambers immediately prior to the opening of the National Assembly decided to uphold M. Painleve's candidature.

The Assembly opened at 2 o'clock this afternoon, M. Doumergue presiding.

The voting has begun.

Later.—M. Doumergue was elected President of the Republic on the first ballot.

The new President obtained 515 votes to 309 cast for M. Painleve.

The Communists voted for M. Camerlinat, who obtained 29 votes. Others received eight votes, while there were seven blanks. The total number of voters was 860.

The elite of Parisan society watched the voting from the galleries. The whole assembly broke into loud cheers when the result was announced, the Communists shouting "Vive la Commune." The Demonstration lasted several minutes. The Center sang the Marseillaise and the Socialists and and Communists the Internationale.

The Premier, M. Marshal, immediately afterwards formally invested M. Doumergue with office. Congratulations followed. M. Painleve was among the first to do so. He and M. Doumergue cordially kissed one another on both cheeks to the delight of the spectators.

In the course of his speech at the ceremony of the investiture Doumergue declared that he would respect the Constitution, which stood above parties. He trusted that President and Parliament would collaborate to solve the grave problems and to enable France to enter an era of useful work and peaceful progress.

Military rendered honors and the crowd cheered as M. Doumergue, accompanied by M. Marsal, left for the Elysee, whence quietly departed.

Immediately on arrival at the Elysee, M. Doumergue summoned M. Herriot.

M. Doumergue, though a Radical-Socialist, largely owes his election to the fact that the Centre and Right voted for him in order to defeat the official candidate of the Left parties, M. Painleve. The latter is considered by the moderates as more of a party man than M. Doumergue.

The new President began life as a lawyer. He was elected to the Chamber in 1893 and held office in many Ministries. He was Premier for the six months ending in June 1914. At present

Peking Dust

A Daily Chronicle Of The Capital's Gossip And News

(By Our Staff Correspondent)

Peking, June 12.—When the Pan Chen Lama, "the jewel among the great scholars," to translate his name from the Tibetan, arrives in Peking in the early fall from Tashilhunpo in Tibet, he will be greeted not only as a Prince of the Lama Church to which several millions of China's citizens belong, but as an ecclesiastical pontiff who also holds a great deal of the political power of Tibet within his hand.

The Pan Chen Lama is in reality a priestly-king, wielding only slightly less power than the Grand Dalai Lama of Lhassa, and the one powerful figure to whom the Chinese feel they can turn in upholding their rights of sovereignity in Tibet against the reported encroachments of Great Britain and Soviet Russia. Each move in his progress from the mountain hinterlands of Tibet across the wilds of China in a princely caravan is being closely watched by the Chinese press, chronicled, and commented upon. For the significance of the Pan Chen Lama's visit to Peking—the first visit a Prince of the Lama Church has made to the capital since the Republic was established—is that the powers-that-be in Tibet are now split into two parties, one favoring cooperation with the British even to the extent of placing Tibet under British protection, and the other faction favoring a continuance of China's theoretical control and administration as at present.

The Pan Chen Lama is supposedly the leader of the pro-Chinese faction, or at least willing to be convinced that China's position is right, and his impending visit is therefore looked upon as the signal for the diplomatic war that has been carried on beneath the surface to blossom out in full bloom and settle, once and for all, the future of Tibet.

Tibet, in theory, is an integral part of the Chinese Republic. In actuality it is a barren, inhospitable land populated with an ignorant, ultra-superstitious race under the dominance of the lamas. Although the Peking Government is officially represented at Lhassa by a Chinese Resident who is supposed to act in the capacity of a Governor-General, Tibet is really ruled by the Dalai Lama at Lhassa, the mysterious capital of the Lama Church, and by the Pan Chen Lama, who lives in a monastery at Tashilhunpo near the town of Shigatse, 150 miles from Lhassa. Both wield a spiritual and temporal power that approaches autocracy, and both are members of the Yellow sect of Lamaism, a perverted contortion of Buddhism.

In addition to the Chinese Resident Tibet, under the new Constitution of China, is entitled to 10 Senators and 10 Representatives, and her affairs are taken care of in Peking by the Bureau of Tibetan and Mongolian Affairs.

Dalai and Pan Chen Lamas of past ages have been treated by the Chinese almost on a plane of equality. While the Sons of Heaven were looking upon accredited representatives of the foreign Powers with contempt and treating them as though they were supplicants for favors from a tributory nation—what is now Legation Street in Peking was formerly known in Chinese as "The Street of Tributory Nations"—the all-powerful Lamas were being accorded the highest respect, greeted with regal receptions, and entertained as visiting monarchs. And that day is not past even now for, upon the request of the Bureau of Tibetan and Mongolian Affars, $100,000 has been appropriated to suitably entertain the Pan Chen Lama when he arrives in Peking. In the meantime two representatives of the government have been delegated to meet him and escort him to the capital and in Kansu—where he is likely to spend the summer as he does not desire to travel by caravan during the intense heat—he is being accorded the rights and privileges due a sovereign prince of a neighboring and friendly state.

In Chinese history the visit of the Pan Chen Lama of that day is recorded as one of the most brilliant events of the decade, and a mighty monument of marble still stands in the grounds of the

Dawes Good Running-Mate For President Coolidge, Says Acquaintance Here

U. S. Marshal Thurston R. Porter, Personal Friend Of Republican Vice-Presidential Nominee, Recalls His Achievements

"There are few men more popula in the United States today than Brig. Gen. Charles Gates Dawes who has been nominated by the Republican Party at its Cleveland convention as the running-mate of President Calvin Coolidge," said Mr. Thurston R. Porter, United States Marshal for China, yesterday in talking of General Dawes, whom he has known since 1902.

"The Republicans did another wise thing in picking an excellent campaigner as its vice-presidential candidate," continued Mr. Porter. "President Coolidge cannot take a really active part in this year's political campaign because he will be prevented from doing so by his duties in Washington. General Dawes is noted for his plan of speaking his mind in open meeting and then sitting down. He earned the title of 'Hell and Maria Dawes' by using plain speaking before a sub-committee of the House of Representatives that was inquiring into alleged mistakes in the conduct of America's part in the World War. He was before this sub-committee for two days and in that space of time by his plain speech he put an end to the quibbling in the United States regarding the war question. He banged the table with his fist, used expletives never heard in a drawing room, and so shamed the fault-finders that they gave up their inquiry.

"But that appearance of General Dawes was not his only action that brought him the nomination for the vice-presidency. He was a leading political light in Illinois in 1895, and 1896, and it was largely through his efforts that the Illinois delegation lined up behind his father's war-time friend, William McKinley. Then he was taken to Washington to be Comptroller of the Currency by President McKinley, which position he filled for five years until 1902.

HANDLED BUDGET PLAN

"President Harding needed someone to formulate the workings of the Budget system, and finally induced General Dawes to spend two years in starting the plan of getting the various departments of the Government on a business basis so far as handling money is concerned. It is through the efforts of General Dawes that the expenses of the United States Government have been reduced, and now our Government generally has a saving of between two and three hundred million dollars a year.

"General Dawes was requested by several of the governments of Europe to come there, to investigate their conditions, and then to frame a plan whereon Germany could pay its reparation debt. This he did successfully, and now we see Germany lining up solidly for the Dawes plan, Great Britain advocating it, and France perfectly agreeable to his reparation system. He spent about two months in Europe, drafted his plan, and then hurried back to the United States, because he's a clear-headed man who brushes away ineffectual impediments and gets to and through the heart of a problem in quick order.

"His habit of thought can be exemplified by an incident of his appearance before the sub-committee of the House of Represent atives that I spoke of a minute ago. One of the carping critics asked if it was not true that no care was taken in ordering material for the front lines, to which General Dawes replied:

PLAIN LANGUAGE!

"'Hell's cats yes!' We were over there to win the war in the quickest way we could. If General Pershing wired me to get him five cars of railway trackage at once, I didn't ask him a lot of damn fool questions, but got the railway trackage to him by the next morning if it was within the power of man to do so. I knew a war was being fought along the front lines and didn't mess around with getting quotations and letting contracts for what he wanted.'

"General Dawes was the oldest son of General Rufus R. and Mary Beman Gates Dawes; was born at Marietta, Ohio, on August 27, 1865, and is therefore in his fifty-ninth year. The Dawes mansion was the biggest residence in Marietta when I lived there from 1899 to 1904. His sister, Bessie Dawes, married Mr. Harry M. Hoyt, who was principal of Marietta Academy where I went to school in 1901 and 1902. His brother, Beman Gates Dawes, was elected to Congress for two terms about that time, and another brother, Henry Gates Dawes, was in the lumber business in Marietta at the time. Still another brother Rufus Cutler Dawes, was and still is a banker at Evanston, Illinois. General Dawes returned to Marietta every year while his mother lived and it was upon the occasions of these visits that I came to know him.

"Graduating from Marietta College in 1884, he attended the Cincinnati Law School from which he was graduated in 1886. He was chief engineer of an Ohio railroad after leaving law school but later went to Lincoln, Nebraska, and practiced law until 1894, when he became interested in some gas interests in Illinois and moved to Evanston. After serving as Comptroller of the Currency from 1897 to 1902, he was offered the presidency of the Central Trust Company of Illinois and has remained the head of that Chicago bank since. He and his brothers were largely instrumental in floating the Ohio Cities Gas Company, which has made them millions of dollars.

MAJOR OF ENGINEERS

"He went to France as a major of engineers in July, 1917, but was made chairman of the General Purchasing Board and General Purchasing Agent of the A. E. F. within three months after reaching French soil. He retired from the army in August, 1919, and returned home. The Distinguished Service Medal, the Order of Leopold (Belgium), and the distinction of being a commander of the Legion d'Honneur (France) were conferred upon him as the result of his splendid work in France.

"General Dawes is a busy business man, and as such has the knack of saying what is on his mind and then turning to other matters. He is an ideal running-mate for President Coolidge and will add strength to the ticket throughout the United States."

CALL FOR FUNDS FOR JULY FOURTH PROGRAM HERE

Entertainment Features Fast Being Arranged

An indication of the interest being taken in the coming Fourth of July celebration here by Americans outside Shanghai is given in a letter received by Mr. D. J. Lewis, secretary of the American Chamber of Commerce, from Hangchow. The writer expresses hopes for a rousing celebration, which he hopes to attend, and sets an admirable example for local Americans by requesting that his name be added to the subscription list.

Preparations for the July Fourth program are fast being shaped up and a full list of entertainment features is promised. Under direction of Mrs. Gardner Crane, a series of tableaux by American children is being worked out and there will be numerous other features throughout the day.

Local Americans are asked to send their subscriptions to the Fourth of July fund as soon as possible so that the committee may have a definite budget to work on. These should be sent to Mr. D. J. Lewis, American Chamber of Commerce, Dollar Building.

Dawes Named As Vice-Presidential Candidate Of G.O.P.

(Reuter's American Service)

Cleveland, June 13.—President Coolidge and General Dawes form the Republican ticket for the 1924 election. President Coolidge was nominated with only a ripple of dissent from the Wisconsin and North Dakota delegations, but the nomination of General Dawes came after ex-Governor Lowden's refusal and after a short race in balloting with Mr. Herbert Hoover as his chief opponent. The official vote on the third ballot was: General Dawes 682, Mr. Hoover 234. The others secured only a few votes.

Mr. Butler, President Coolidge's manager at the Convention, indicated a desire when the balloting began that Mr. Burton of the House of Representatives should be chosen, but the delegates disregarded the suggestion, Mr. Butler, after Mr. Lowden's refusal, again endeavored to intervene in favor of Mr. Hoover, but the delegates refused to be swayed.

DEATH LIST 43

Nearby Steamer Narrowly Escapes Disaster

(Reuter's American Service)

San Pedro, June 13.—Three officers and 43 men were swept to death by the premature explosion of a shell in the battleship Mississippi's No. 2 turret and a score of others injured by the flare-back, carrying a terrific charge through the breech instead of the muzzle.

The guncrew was preparing to fire a broadside when a sailor called for the turning on of the electricity to fire the charge before the breech was locked. A flash followed and the turret was littered with dead and dying.

The Mississippi immediately raced to port, wirelessing the news of the disaster to the hospital-ship Relief, which rushed out to meet her, but just as the Mississippi let go her anchor another blast rocked her and a 14-inch shell shrieked past the steamer Yale, which was crowded with passengers, but ploughed the sea harmlessly.

After the dead and injured had been transhipped it was discovered that another unexploded charge in the gunchamber was likely to explode at any moment, so the Mississippi hurriedly steamed to sea to obviate the possibility of a shell ploughing Sa Pedro and killing many persons.

LESTER CHARGED WITH ATTEMPT TO MURDER SEAMAN

Shooting Case Remanded After Evidence Of Arrest

A charge of attempting to murder James Walsh, an unemployed seaman, by shooting him with a pistol at the Wayport Rooms Friday afternoon, was brought against W. N. Lester, unemployed engineer, who came before Judge Peter Grain sitting as Magistrate in the British Court yesterday. Walsh was shot in the thigh, the wound not being serious.

Evidence of Lester's arrest was given by Chief Detective Inspector Cruickshank, who located the accused at the Continental Hotel bar at about 5 p.m., an hour after the shooting. After he had seized Lester by the arms the latter said: "It's all right; I have no revolver on me." When witness stated that he was going to arrest Lester for shooting a man the captive said: "Oh, it's that d— bum Walsh." Warned against speaking accused went on to remark "That's all right. I shot him, in the leg." Taken to Hongkew police station and charged, Lester expressed the desire to make a statement, which the Inspector took down. The note was read in court, being as follows:

"That d— bum came to my house about 3 p.m. on the 10th of this month. I fitted him out with clothing, boots, hat and everything. At 4 p.m. Walsh suggested he go for Chinese wine. I gave him 60 cents and he brought back three large bottles of wine. We drank together and I got so drunk I fell on the floor. I was found in that state when the detectives came and arrested me (this was in connection with a civil action) and I found a large amount of property stolen and I went indoors and found all the doors and windows open. I reported the theft to Hongkew and Wayside stations. That d— bum Walsh took my property and I shot him. That's all."

Lester was remanded until next Friday.

INSTRUCTIVE TALK ON RADIO GIVEN TO ARTS SOCIETY

Prof. C. H. Roberts Lectures At China Society Meeting

The last meeting of the season of the China Society of Science and Arts was held yesterday in the beautiful grounds of the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bena, 90 Jessfield road. Professor C. H. Robertson, head of the lecture department of the Y. M. C. A. for all China, was the speaker and gave his audience a most interesting and instructive talk on the wonders of the radio.

Professor Robertson's lecture, while highly technical in parts, was presented so clearly with the aid of numerous pieces of apparatus which had been rigged up on the lawn and verandah that his audience followed it with the greatest ease. Following his explanation of different wave lengths, illustrated with charts and with electrical appartus, he conducted his audience into the house where a moving picture machine detailed the marvels of the radio, step by step.

A receiving station on the lawn at the left of the house picked the time signals of Siccawei station out of the air and broadcasted them to the crowd.

Several pieces of apparatus Professor Robertson used were made in the Y. M. C. A. shops here under his direction and as a result of his study.

One of the most interesting phases of the lecture was the report of various experiments that are being conducted all over the world by radio experts and a statement by Professor Robertson of the possibilities of radio.

One of these is concerned with enabling blind persons to read by means of a machine that travels across the lines of a printed page and sends certain characteristic sounds for certain letters to the ear of the blind individual enabling him, after a little practise, really to hear the printed word and read, literally, by ear.

About seventy-five or eighty members of the Society and others interested attended the lecture, at the conclusion of which a vote of thanks was tendered to Professor Robertson for his excellent talk and to Mr. and Mrs. Bena for their hospitality.

Chinese Merchants Institution Lacks Detailed Word From Hongkong

There were no further developments here yesterday as regards the suspension of payments of the Chinese Merchants' Bank, which ceased paying depositors last Thursday on instructions from the head offices in Hongkong.

It was stated during the day that a wire had been received from Hongkong instructing the local branches to await further instructions. Officials of the branches here, at Ningpo and Kiangse Roads and at 2 North Szechuen Road, reiterated their former statement that the Shanghai offices are entirely solvent and that they were still awaiting an explanation from Hongkong.

A few depositors were to be seen about the offices yesterday but there was no excitement.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 11.—Rumor is again active regarding the Cabinet situation. Premier Sun Pao-chi has not yet returned from Hattien, and it is reported that his relations with Mr. Wang Ken-ming are again somewhat strained. Premier Sun's continued absence from the capital is generally interpreted as a desire to avoid attacks in Parliament. Meanwhile the opposition in Parliament appears to be strengthening. As regards the Sino-German settlement, and there seems to be a probability of some delay in the matter being referred to Parliament, as has occurred with the Sino-Russian agreement.

Doumergue Is New President

he is President of the Senate. He is described as a fine speaker, confident, polished, well-informed and much respected. He knows England well and is very friendly towards her. Long before the war he advocated very close collaboration between France and Britain. The prospect, therefore, of M. Herriot and Mr. MacDonald reaching a complete understanding on pending questions at their forthcoming meeting appears very favorable.

M. Doumergue is sixty-one years of age. He is a Southerner. He is the first Protestant or bachelor President. He was at one time a member of the Colonial magistracy, holding posts in Indo-China and Algeria.

The election of M. Doumergue is regarded as a severe blow to the Left bloc as the entire Opposition in the Chamber and the whole Senate, including the Radicals, voted for him.

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, June 13.—M. Marsal has tendered the resignation of the Cabinet.

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 13.—The replacement of M. Millerand by President Doumergue ends one of the most remarkable incidents in the life of the Third Republic. M. Millerand had still over three years of the presidency to run, but he had too deeply offended the Left for them to agree to serve under him. They, in spite of his denials of unconstitutional conduct, contend that he identified himself openly in the electoral crisis with the national bloc, of which he was the founder, while certain reported declarations led to suspicion in some quarters that he was playing with the idea of converting the presidency into a kind of personal dictatorship. Moreover, his action as Premier in 1920 in assisting Poland against the Bolshevik invasion and in putting down the railway strike has never been forgotten by the Communists and others of the Left.

NEW HOSPITAL HAS OPENING AT TAIANFU

Modern Building Will Serve Large Area In Shantung

(China Press Correspondence)

Taianfu, Shantung, June 11.—This has been a big day in this city. The first modern hospital building not only for this city but among five millions of people was "opened" today. There has been a throng of people in the hospital grounds on the Methodist Mission Compound throughout the day. A force of soldiers at the gates has prevented a veritable mob of the friendly uninvited who sought to enter and see what was going on.

Many scrolls and tablets have come in but the most important prepared by the leading gentry arrived properly escorted at about eleven o'clock amidst the usual din of guns and firecrackers and the noise of musical instruments of many kinds. Of course all who had anything to do with the business were then properly feasted.

Under a great tented enclosure a formal program was rendered, consisting of musical numbers and speeches, chief of which was that of the local county official. There were visitors from other places representing hospitals and churches in several counties. It has altogether been a great occasion for this whole region as this is the only medical work in a dozen or more counties so that the interest in this institution is much more than local.

By an agreement with other Missions the Methodists have full charge of the medical work throughout this region and there is no duplication of effort.

Medical work has been carried on here for about twenty-five years, but this is the first time that a suitable building has been available so that a new era is opening. There has been about $30,000 invested in the new plant and a good staff of workers is being secured. This will soon be a great center of medical work.

Dancer Urges Bishops To Lift Dance Ban

"Billy" Tichenor, a professional dancer, 19 years old, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, appeared before the Board of Bishops of the Church, consisting of representatives from all over the world, in session in Brooklyn, N. Y., and made a plea for the lifting of the amusement ban. This ban also includes theater going, card playing and picture shows. The Bishops promised to place the plea before the General Conference of the Church, which met in May, at Springfield, Mass.

Yellow Temple here as a memorial to the great Lama who died of smallpox during his visit.

The Yellow Temple, or Huang Ssu, stands on the An Ting plain, just outside the walls of the city—a relic in ruins of its former majesty. It consists of two establishments of several buildings, the Eastern having been built by the Emperior Shun Chih in 1652 on the site of an earlier temple as a Peking residence for the Grand Lamas whenever they visited the capital. They are still in fair condition and will serve as the palace of the Pan Chen Lama when he arrives here in the Fall.

The Western establishment was erected sixty or seventy years later by Emperor K'ang Hsi as a residence for minor Tibetan lamas, members of the Grand Lama's staff, and his retainers, and has since fallen into decay and ruins.

The temple and buildings were erected because the Emperors needed the allegiance and assistance of the rulers of the Tibetan Church—and the Republicans who rule China today are doing everything within their power to conciliate them also, and particularly the Pan Chen Lama, because they fear their power and need their assistance.

The marble "stupa," which is the outstanding monument of the temple, was built by the Emperor Ch'ien Lung, the Magnificent, as a memorial to the Pan Chen Lama who died here while on a visit in 1780, and has withstood the ravages of time much better than the rest of the temple. While the magnificent p'ai lou which formerly faced the "stupa" is a heap of stone and dirt; while the wonderful main hall with the huge statue of the Sakyamuni Buddha, to whom the temple was dedicated is filled with cracks and gradually being transformed into the dust from which it came, and while the once beautiful grounds are now filled with broken remnants of pillars and weeds—the magnificent "stupa" still retains its ancient grandeur.

The monument is modelled on the lines of the ancient religious edifices of India with Tibetan influence showing in the inverted dome, the spire being composed of thirteen segments symbolical of the Buddhist heavens and surrounded by a cupola of bronze. On each corner of the monument is a stone pagoda and a splendid white marble p'ai lou faces it.

Around the marble base a wave-pattern floor is carved, studded here and there in regular sequence with crayfish and dragons and around the monument, on all four sides, are carved scenes from the late lamented Lama's life. The carvings depict his marvelous birth, his training his entry into the Lama Church as the Pan Chen Lama, his caravan voyage to Peking, his greeting on the way by the Emperor Ch'ien Lung, his death from smallpox—depicted as devils who by the black art overcame his guardian protectors, and finally his funeral. The last carving shows the Lama being transferred on high on stone clouds while all the world—including a lion wiping his eyes with his stone paw—weeps at his passing. The carving is some of the best stone work that has been done in China although many of the heads of the figures were knocked off—so a Chinese at the monument tells you—by Japanese bayonets during the Boxer troubles, and have since been replaced with inferior work that contrasts illy with the other work.

After the Pan Chen's death Ch'ien Lung ordered the monument erected and then went about returning the priest-king's body to Tibet with all the ceremony attaching to the death of a royal being. His body was burned and the ashes returned to Tibet in a golden casket, but his smallpox infected garments were buried beneath the mighty monument he erected in commemoration of his visit and his death.

The Pan Chen Lama will live in the temple grounds only a short distance away from the monument when he comes to Peking—in the quarters in which his illustrious predecessor as well as two Dalai Lamas. One of the Dalai Lamas came in 1652 amid great pomp and ceremony. The second came in 1908 following his flight from Lhassa. His visit gives one of the most romantic touches in Chinese history as the Empress Dowager Tz'u Hsi considered his visit an ill-omen as she had been told by the Imperial astrologers that her own death would occur during his visit. As a matter of pure fact the Dalai Lama called to pay his respects to the Empress Dowager and as he knelt before her her soul fled to another world for when he raised his head he looked into the dead eyes of the mighty woman ruler. She died during the audience!

And now another Grand Lama comes to China at a time when many things might happen.

Grounded Glen Line Ship Successfully Salvaged

After nearly a month of strenuous work, the Glen Line motor ship, Glenamoy, which went on the rocks in the Chusans early in May, has been successfully salvaged, according to word brought to Shanghai yesterday.

The salvage work was conducted by the Tokio Salvage Company, Ltd., for whom the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha are local agents.

The Glenamoy, which crashed upon the rocks at Video Island, the Chusan Archipelago, on May 11, was hauled off at 4.30 a.m. Friday and was then towed by the Tokio company's salvage boat Azuma Maru a distance of 35 miles to Beal Island, where she now lies in a sheltered spot and where further repairs will be made before the vessel is brought on to Shanghai. The 35-mile trip northward from Video Island took about ten hours, but was successfully accomplished in the face of difficulties.

The salvage work on the Glenamoy was conducted under the supervision of Capt. S. Mori, managing director, with Chief Engineer S. Tashiro and Capt. K. Miyazaki in direct charge, while between 70 and 80 workmen, including ten divers participated in the job.

When the salvage people arrived on May 16 they found the forward holds, Nos. 1 and 2 and the forepeak flooded, the ship hanging by her head onto the rocks, several of which had pierced the hull for a considerable distance and prevented her being hauled off astern. Cargo was first taken from above the tween decks and a coffer dam was then constructed on the lower deck hatchway and six big pumps were put to work. A continuous heavy swell hampered the work and prevented the divers from being able to go below, besides which debris from the many bales of paper cargo kept continually choking the suction of the pumps. In spite of these obstacles after about ten days' work, the forward part was pumped out. Water was then pumped into the after holds to lift the ship's head and as she came free Friday morning she was hauled off aft.

During the salvage operations, besides the Azuma Maru, the company had the 800-ton coasting steamer Nagasaki Maru I, constantly in attendance in case of emergency. The Azuma Maru was alongside all the while, supplying steam for the pumps.

Though a large amount of cargo was lightered out of the Glenamoy, it is stated that a considerable quantity is still aboard. It is not yet possible to state when the ship will be brought on to Shanghai, but repair work is to go ahead immediately and it is expected that it will be possible to move her in the near future.

Comparative Law School Holds Its Commencement

Modern Chinese Legal History was the theme of the address of the Hon. Tung K'ang, former Minister of Justice and President of the Chinese Supreme Court, delivered yesterday on the occasion of the seventh annual commencement of The Comparative Law School of China, Law Department of Soochow University.

On Friday, as part of the Commencement Program, a Public Mock Court Trial was held. Commissioner N. E. Lurton and Chief Procurator C. S. Chu served as Judges. The trial was conducted according to Mixed Court procedure by the graduating class, and was well attended. A silver shield was awarded to the winning side by Mr. Kiang Yee-bing, an alumnus.

The regular graduating exercises on yesterday were opened with a picturesque procession in which the speakers, graduating class, and members of the faculty took part, dressed in caps and gowns. Mrs. C. A. Gunn played the march.

LARGE CLASS

Devotional exercises were led by Dr. W. B. Nance, President of the University, after which Mrs. J. H. Black rendered a vocal solo. The candidates for the LL. B. degrees were then introduced by the Dean of the Law School, Mr. W. W. Blume. Mr. Blume presented the class as being the first to receive degrees since the school has moved into its new quarters at 11-a Quinsan Road. He also called attention to the size of the class, it being twice as large as any previous graduating class. Acknowledgment was made of a cash gift of $150 made by the graduates to the Law Library. Two members of the class were mentioned for honors, Yang Feng-chun whose general grade average for the three years was 92 percent and Herbert C. T. Lee, whose average was 91 percent.

Dr. Nance then made a short address dealing with the ideals which the institution has sought to instill into its students and calling upon the graduates to carry into their future careers the ruling motive of public service and the supreme aim of establishing justice between man and man and between nations in a world where injustice is the source of its manifold ills.

DEGREES CONFERRED

The bachelor degrees were then conferred by Dr. J. A. G. Shipley, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University, upon the following candidates: Chang Ching-rwen, William Wenpak Chen, Cheng Ying-hou, Afman Hsi, Charles H. Kao, Herbert C. T. Lee, R. C. W. Sheng, Ruchin T. Y. Tsar, Tsiang Koh-fong, Tsok Kong-ming, Yang Feng-chun, Henry T. Yao, I. W. Yen, Zurtin Zao, Zongsan Zia.

Following the rendition of a violin solo by Mrs. Oswald Check, representatives of the student body presented to Dean Blume a token of their appreciation of his 3½ years of service as dean of the school.

DEAN TAKING FURLOUGH

Mr. Blume leaves on June 23 for the United States on a year's furlough. In reply Mr. Blume stated something of his plans for developing the school in the future, and mentioned the school's good fortune in securing Dr. George Sellett to serve as dean during the coming year. Other new members for the school staff will be Rev. J. H. H. Berckman who will serve as Chaplain and Treasurer, and Dr. John C. H. Wu, graduate of the Universities of Michigan, Paris, Berlin, and Harvard, who will be professor of jurisprudence. This year's issue of the Woolsack, the school annual, was also dedicated to Mr. Blume.

The candidate for the Honorary Doctorate of Laws, the Hon. Tung K'ang was introduced by Dr. D. S. Chen of the law school faculty. Dr. Chen mentioned at some length Mr. Tung's record of public service. Following the reply by the candidate, the honorary degree was conferred by Dr. Shipley.

SPEAK ON LEGAL SYSTEM

Mr. Tung's oration was in Chinese, and contained a very interesting account of recent Chinese legal history. The following is a summary:

"The Chinese legal system dates back as far as two thousand years ago. It has a place in history equally important with that of Roman law."

Dr. Tung proceeded to discuss how the legal development in China has been retarded on account of the undue importance attached to literary study in time past, to the exclusion of legal research. He said that it was not due to the lack of men of juridical mind that China made little progress in her laws. The Tang Code, or the Code of the Tang Dynasty, formulated by a few jurists, bore a close resemblance to the Common law in England. They have much in Common. For instance, according to the Tang Code, infancy was divided into three periods; under seven years of age, under twelve years of age, and under sixteen years of age. The liability of infants varied according to these periods. This is similar to certain principles in the common law.

Dr. Tung then enumerated the different codes formulated by various dynasties since the Han Regime. He dwelt upon the undesirability of sticking to the old codes and overlooking the customs and changing conditions of different places throughout the country, which has been a prominent feature in the judicial administration since the late Ching Dynasty. He further touched upon the criminal law as enforced by the Ching dynasty, together with a resume of the criminal procedure.

CODIFICATION

Toward the close of the Ching Dynasty, said Dr. Tung, a law Codification Bureau was established, in which Dr. Tung himself took active part. Various laws were made by this Bureau, many of which, as the Law for the Organisation of the Judiciary, Police Laws, and the Criminal Code, have been adopted with certain modifications.

Dr. Tung pointed out that it was a great mistake on the part of the law codifiers that the Continental System of Law was adopted for China instead of the Anglo-American System. "The former system, with its intricate provisions and complicated procedure, is diametrically opposite to the traditions and customs throughout this country. My tour of England and America has brought home to me most forcibly that a thorough judicial reform according to the Anglo-American legal system is urgently needed."

SUGGESTS REFORMS

Dr. Tung suggested that the following reform of the present legal system in China should receive especial attention.

(I) As regards the organisation of the judiciary. 1. On account of the complicated procedure of the Procurator-system which entailed nothing but delay in administering justice, it has been a target for criticism and thereby tends to lower respect toward the court by the public. In order to ameliorate such a state of affairs, well-trained lawyers should be retained by the court for doing preliminary work before the formal trial. 2. The magistrate of a district should be vested with judicial powers and be authorised to decide controversies himself, instead of employing a separate judicial officer. In view of the fact that it is practically impossible to establish many district courts in the country, this seems to be the only remedy. 3. The whole country should be divided into several judicial districts, in which Branch Supreme Courts should be established. The present Supreme Court at Peking is encumbered annually with over two thousand cases. In order to prevent delay, branch courts are urgently needed.

CIVIL LAW

(II) As regards the Civil Law. Owing to the diversity of customs and traditions in the different parts of China, it is a question whether the Civil Code (yet to be published) will work efficiently. Apart from the laws of persons and succession, which can be unified without much difficulty, the best remedy will be to follow the American example. The authorities in each province should be vested with the power of resolving into definite form the local customs having the force of law and carrying them into operation. In case of a conflict between the customs of two provinces, the Central Government should provide a mode of reconciliation.

(III) As regards Procedure. 1. As a means to avoid the multiplicity of suits, the methods of arbitration as enforced especially in the United States and France should be followed. Originally, a form of compulsory arbitration was in force during the Ching Dynasty, which was similar in certain respects to accord and satisfaction in foreign countries. But in view of the changing conditions in society, new methods should be introduced so as to attain the best results. 2. Ample scope should be allowed the courts in the question of jurisdiction. In England, provisions governing jurisdiction are enforced without much rigidity. This resembles our old laws to some extent. In order to insure speedy justice, means should be provided to enable the courts to assume jurisdiction without unnecessary delay.

Details Given Of Japanese Outburst In Tokio Hotel

Further details of the demonstration carried out by Japanese agitators in the Imperial Hotel, Tokio, as a consequence of the recently passed American immigration law, are available in the latest issue of the Japan Advertiser to come to hand. The account follows:

The most serious demonstration aimed as a protest against the American immigration bill occurred last night at the Imperial Hotel when a dozen Japanese men entered the dining room and began up-braiding the Japanese for associating with foreigners.

Breaking away from the restraining arms of the hotel officials, several agitators rushed to the center of the dancing hall and called the Japanese "cowards" for indulging in gaiety at a time "of national crisis."

Several groups, including British, French, Italians, as well as Americans and Japanese left the dining room.

The dance was ended almost before it began.

Mr. Jefferson Caffrey, charge d'affaires of the American Embassy, and other members of the Embassy staff witnessed the affair.

The police made no move to halt the demonstration although it is said they knew of the plans at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

PART OF LARGE AFFAIR

From Japanese sources, considered authoritative and friendly to Americans, it was learned that last night's demonstration was only a part of a larger affair which had for its purpose the eviction of all Americans in the Imperial Hotel.

The demonstration is said first to have been planned by a group of students. All afternoon a Japanese, who is friendly to foreigners, pleaded with them for hours to give up their plan, telling them that such a demonstration would be directed not only against Americans but against all other foreigners as well. After hours of pleading that group gave up their plan.

But another group, members of the Young Men's Great Forward Society, according to handbills thrown around the Imperial Hotel, decided to carry out the demonstration. Shortly after 8 o'clock, the men appeared before the entrance of the hotel where Japanese friends of foreigners met them and learned of their plans.

Unable to drive them away, the Japanese obtained the services of a young man to give a number of dances to attract the attention of the diners.

The radicals entered the hotel and perceived the subterfuge. So they waited. After the youthful dancer had worn himself out in an effort to amuse the dining room guests, the men dashed into the middle of the floor. While comrades distributed the handbills among the hotel guests, one excited youth in the middle of the ball room floor began whipping the Japanese present into a high state of excitement with inflammatory statements against the American immigration bill. Several shouts of "banzai" were heard.

LADIES LEAVE ROOM

Meanwhile, all the ladies in the dining room left the place, while the men stood up. The dance orchestra, sensing the tension, began playing "Kimigayo," the national hymn, in which the Japanese present joined with lusty fervor. When the song ended, a Japanese mounted a chair and told the foreigners in English that the agitation was not directed against foreigners but against the Japanese, who were engaged in frivolous pastimes instead of being concerned "at a time of national danger."

But the harm had been done. The evening's entertainment had been spoiled and many participants had left the hotel. After much pleading and wheedling, the agitators were taken from the ball room and left the hotel. The hotel orchestra was dispersed and the music scores were scattered to the four winds. A few couples waited in the room for a half hour or more, hoping the orchestra would reappear. But the evening's pleasure was ended.

ANTI-AMERICAN HANDBILL

The handbill circulated among the dancers included the following statements:

"This is no time for idle talking. This is the time for carrying out our purposes.

"We demand all American missionaries to leave.

"Let us prohibit dancing, which kills the nation's spirit and demoralises our manners.

"Let us discontinue watching American motion pictures.

"Let us carry out a boycott against American commodities.

"Let us cancel all American treaties and prohibit Americans coming to Japan as well as Japanese going to America.

"We cannot leave things to our elders. This is the time for us (nameless youths) to stand up."

The actions of the Japanese demonstrators created much excitement in the hotel although many foreigners did not grasp the full significance until after the men had left. The outbreak was the sole topic of conversation in the hotel lobbies until an early hour this morning as excited groups stood about discussing it and the purpose behind it.

Members of the same organisation, which caused the outbreak at the Imperial Hotel, went all about Tokio last night and forced several motion pictures shows, using American films and frequented by foreigners, to close their doors.

"I hear that Joe walloped you two sets this morning!"

"It wasn't Joe, the big stiff—it was that new DAYTON steel racquet he's just started using."

SINLA BUDDHA
Over 1,800 years old

This Golden Buddha was fashioned of gold, silver and copper in the Sinla Dynasty, more than 1,800 years ago.

In those days it was the national law of the country to bury a buddha with any eminent official or member of the Royal Family, if he or she died, Buddhism being the national religion.

At that time there was an eminent man called Yu Sam Jai, who was the Prime Minister of the King's Court. When the Prime Minister died the King sent this Buddha to be buired with him, in accordance with the law.

Two hundred and sixty years ago this Buddha was discovered in the grave by the late Prime Minister's descendant.

The Sinla Dynasty was before the age of Koreo. In the year 1915, at Osaka, one Sinla Buddha, smaller than this one, was sold by public auction for Y250,000 The height was only 6 inches, and the bottom was broken off.

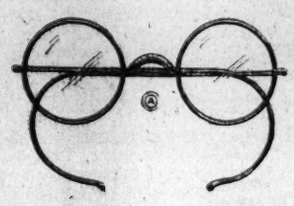
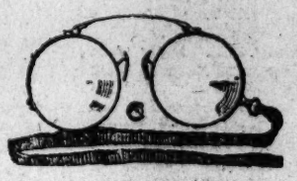
We take pleasure in announcing the extension of our premises

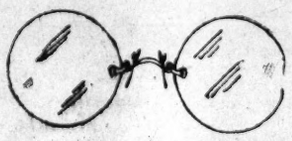
We have taken over the shop (lately occupied by the Electric Equipment Co.) corner of Nanking and Honan Roads which now gives us five times the floor space and frontage.



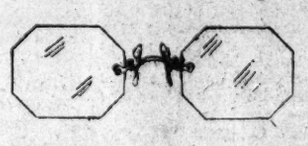
As soon as alterations are completed, both our old and new establishments will be conneected. We will then have five examination rooms.



During the whole history of this business, for nearly two decades, since it was founded by the late John A. Gatton, there has never been any event equal in importance to this extension.



By the addition of two specialists (one from Canada, and one from London) together with the services of a local physician, we will have a personnel unequalled anywhere and thus assuring our patrons of the most complete service obtainable.



For eighteen months, during its present management, the O.I.C. has progressed faster than in its entire history.

These facts are conclusive!

They prove beyond any doubt, that the O.I.C. performs promises, and satisfies the majority of patrons.

We desire to thank every wearer of O. I. C. Glasses for their patronage and recommendation whieh has made possible this wonderful Extension to the business premises of the Oculists' Institute Co.

We promise to continue to perform in every detail their highest expectations of super—optical service, and so endeavour to deserve the continuance of their valued patronage.

UNTIL FURTHER NOTICE!

WE REPEAT ALL THREE OFFERS

How a Loss was Turned into a Profit!

When we first made our three special offers, we carefully calculated the cost of materials, labor, machinery wear and tear, rent, light, power and other overhead expense and we decided that the loss resulting from these special offers would be charged to advertising and goodwill.

We foresaw that those who had been accustomed to paying $5.00 to $10.00 for a lens repair would so appreciate our nominal charge of $1.00 that we would benefit by their future patronage and recommendation to their friends.

We did not foresee, however, that by the tremendous volume of business which resulted, our overhead expenses would be cut down so much that we actually made a profit on what was apparently a loss. That is ezactly what happened. Besides, we gained considerable goodwill and made thousands of new friends.

Instead of merely a handful of patrons daily, like other optical shops, the customers came so fast that every available chair was occupied and many times there was hardly standing room.

This is not exaggeration! We have built up the largest optical business in the Orient—we have added and are still adding new machinery and it required two shifts, working night and day to turn out our precriptions.

And most wonderful of all, our business is building daily, which proves that we are satisfying the majority of our patrons.

The sound principles upon which this business is being built are the liberal standard guarantees we offer:—

(1)—O. I. C. Glasses.—regardless of who fitted them are absolutely guaranteed. If either the lenses or frame are in any way unsatisfactory, please eall and we will make any adjustment gratis. Small repairs and similar service free.

(2)—O. I. C. Examination is guaranteed.—If unsatisfactory secure the prescription of any other oculist we will fill it with a new pair of glassess free of charge.

Additional Personnel

We have aquried the services of a Conadiun Optometrist, Registered by and graduate of both Canadian and American Autorities, who is now enroute.

We are also aquiring the services of an English Opthalmic Optican, (Fellow of the Worshipful Company of Spectacle Makers and Freeman of the City of London).

Additional Machinery

In addition to the three surfacing machines added last month, we are now installing five more antomatic—surfacing, edging and cutting machines of the latest design and improvements.

Additional Equipment

There will shortly arrive for our new prernises, two complete refractive units, including the latest opthalmic chairs with complete modern examining equipment. These have never before been used in Shanghai. Both units represents an investment in many cases greater than the entire examining equipment of other opticians.

An Innovation!

A Complete Model Factory will be installed in two windows of our new establishment.

Here, under ideal and immacutately sanitary conditions, O. I. C. glasses will be made for your inspection.

Clad in white uniforms, twelve picked men, the highest paid optical workmen in Shanghai, will demonstrate on twelve machines the entire operations of lens making from start to finish, including roughing, surfacing, polishing, cutting, chipping, edging, drilling and mounting.

This will be the most sanitary and perfectly appointed factory in the Orient. Besides absolute accuracy in filling of our prescriptions, the greatest care will be exercised in ensuring cleanliness in making O.I.C. glasses—not only in the making but after completion they are immersed in antiseptic solution—just one of the details at O.I.C. Super Service.

"What Others Say About us"

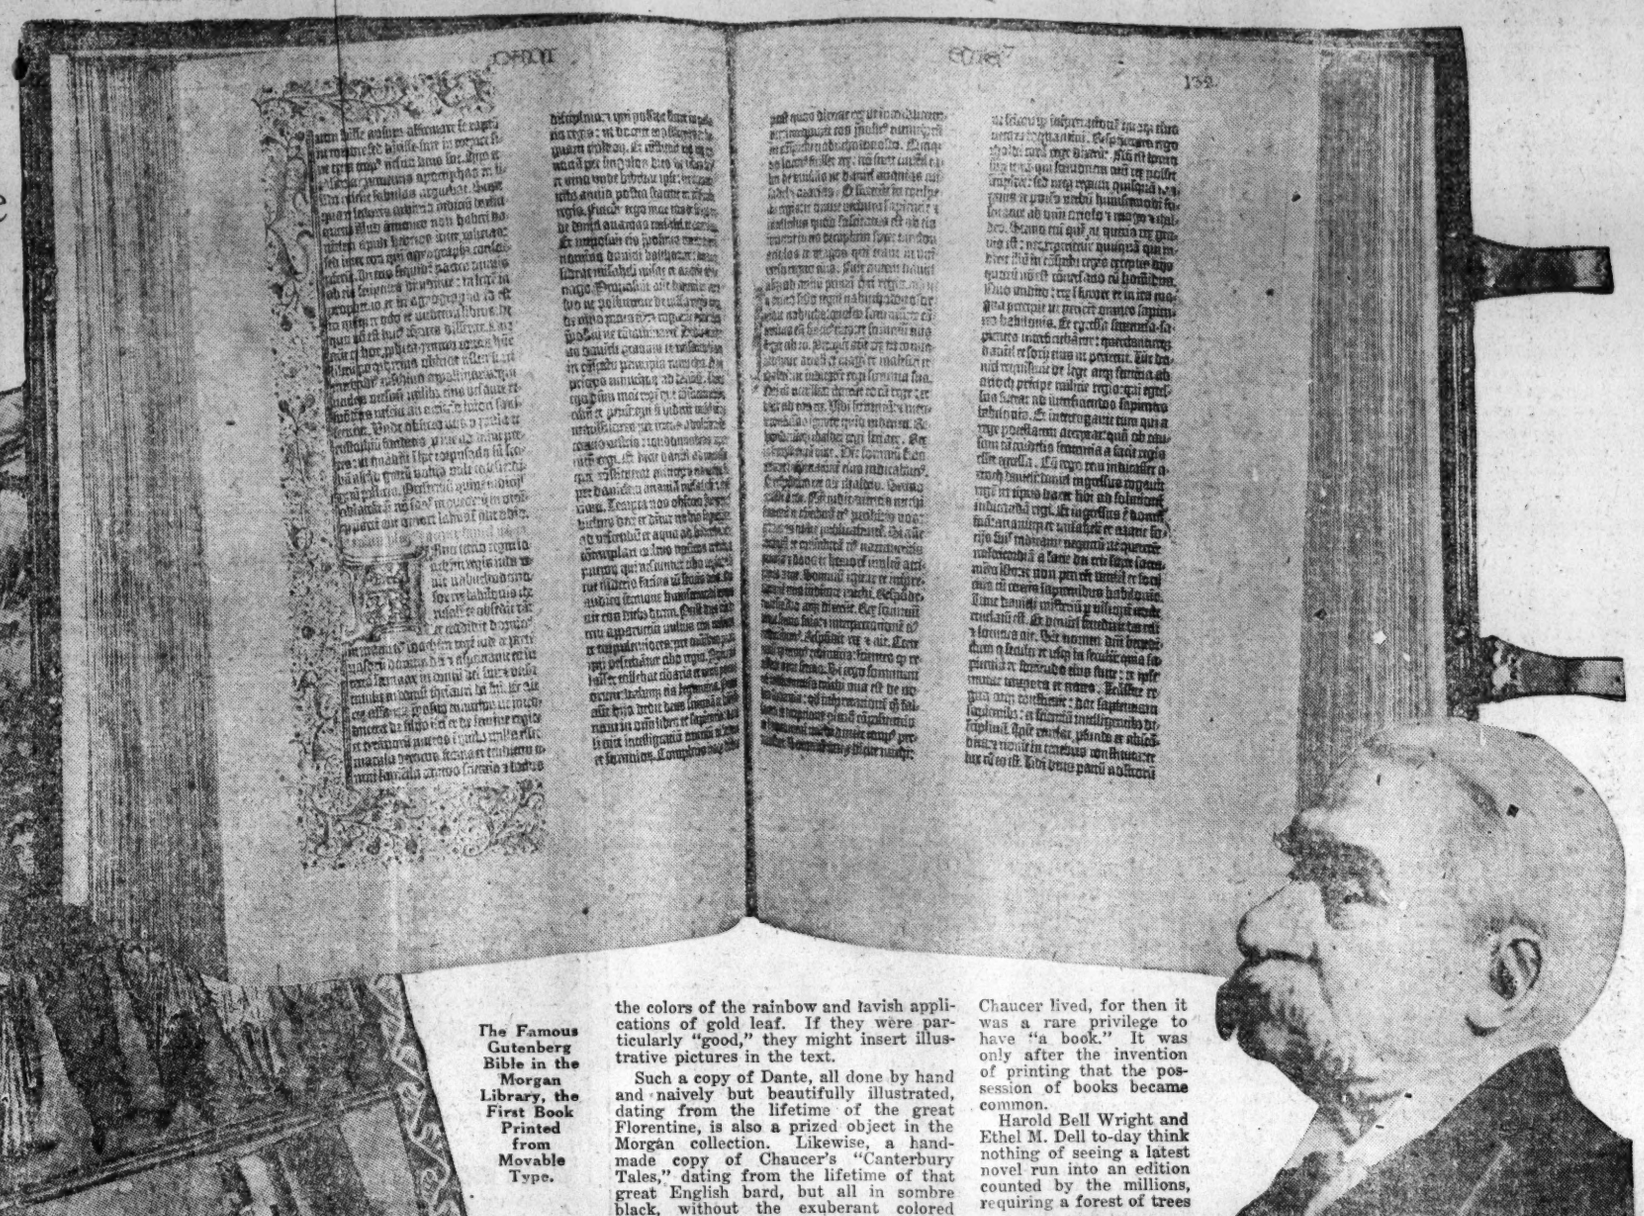
"I have seen the largest optical shops in every large city of the World, and have no hesitation in saying that when the addition is completed the O.I.C. will undoubtedly be one of the finest equipped and one the largest if not the largest optical establishment in the World"—

So said a visitor to Shanghai this week,—the General Manager of one of the largest optical manufacturers in Europe, now completing a World Tour after visiting Europe, Africa, New Zealand, Australia and the Orient.

We are proud of our progress—proud of the careful conscientious optical work and comfortable becoming glasses which has made possible our slogan "Largest, most modern and best Equipped Optical Offices in the Orient."

Bible Treasures of the Morgan Collection

Gutenberg's Masterpiece and Jeweled Book Made for Charles V. of Spain Among Rare Volumes



The Famous Gutenberg Bible in the Morgan Library, the First Book Printed from Movable Type.

Page from the Illuminated Spanish Apocalypse of the XII Century.

THE art of printing with ink from movable blocks of wood was practiced in China at an early undetermined date, according to the professors and encyclopedias.

That "early undetermined date" may have been 3,000 B. C. or 400 A. D. China was a "far-off heathen land," and at the beginning of the fifteenth century civilized Europe knew nothing of the discovery.

So these same learned professors and encyclopedias, dismissing the Chinese as if they were creatures of another planet, record that Johannes Gutenberg, Mainz, Germany, about 1440 or a few years later, was "the inventor of printing."

He wasn't the real inventor of printing, and his name wasn't Gutenberg. He was "geboren Gensfleisch," which means Goosefiesh, so that he can scarcely be blamed for changing it to his mother's more euphonious patronymic. He already had the inventor's itch for fame, and who could hope to make the name of Goosefiesh famous?

Having settled that point, he made the first movable molded type ever known in Europe, jilted a sweetheart, was sued for breach of promise, and eventually produced "the first printed Bible and the first printed book" ever seen in a civilized, Christian land.

This Bible is now in the J. Pierpont Morgan Library, in New York, greatest private collection of books in the world, which has just become a public reference library through the gift of the present J. Pierpont Morgan.

The library contains many other famous Bibles: The jeweled Bible, originally owned by the Emperor Charles V. of Spain; Oliver Cromwell's Bible; the Golden Gospels, illuminated in gold on purple vellum, owned by King Henry VIII; the great Ashburnham Bible; Mme. de Maintenon's; Sir Walter Scott's; Bibles in Icelandic and many strange tongues, and the Hebrew Bible of 1482.

But the Gutenberg Bible is perhaps the most interesting of all, because it is the first one ever printed from type, and consequently the precursor of all printed books.

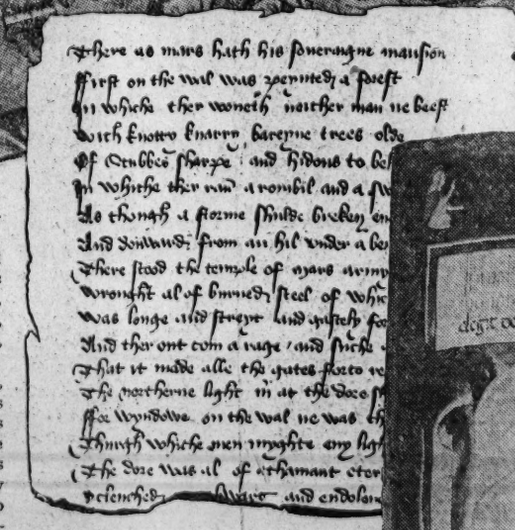
In it Gutenberg, around 1445 or 1450, put everything from Genesis to Revelation, but he neglected to add the date of printing.

A few years later, in 1456, to be exact, Peter Schoeffer and Johann Fust, also at Mainz, Germany, printed a Psalter, or Book of Psalms, in which they carefully inserted the date, and this volume has come down through history as "the first printed book with an authenticated date."

This book may also be seen in the Morgan Library collection, and a noble sight it is—a much more substantial and honest job of printing than the latest machine-made novel on your own library table.

The period around 1450 was a fairly late date in the history of European literature. Dante, Chaucer and a number of other authors whose works one may now buy at any bookstore, lived and died without ever having seen a printed book.

If one wanted a copy of Dante's "Divine Comedy" in the lifetime of that author, he had to find somebody who possessed a manuscript of it, and then pay some monk, or clerk, or scrivener, to copy it all off by hand. If one were rich enough to pay good artisans, they would do it on fine parchment or vellum, with beautifully hand-painted and "illuminated" capital letters, in which they used all the colors of the rainbow and lavish applications of gold leaf. If they were particularly "good," they might insert illustrative pictures in the text.



Manuscript Version in Old English from Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Such a copy of Dante, all done by hand and naively but beautifully illustrated, dating from the lifetime of the great Florentine, is also a prized object in the Morgan collection. Likewise, a hand-made copy of Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," dating from the lifetime of that great English bard, but all in sombre black, without the exuberant colored decorations so frequently lavished on such works in sunny Italy.

Until Gutenberg invented printing, this was the only sort of book in Europe. After that began the deluge.

Last Winter there became current in this Land of the Free and Home of the Brave a witticism which, in abbreviated form, ran something like this:

Mamie says to Maggie:

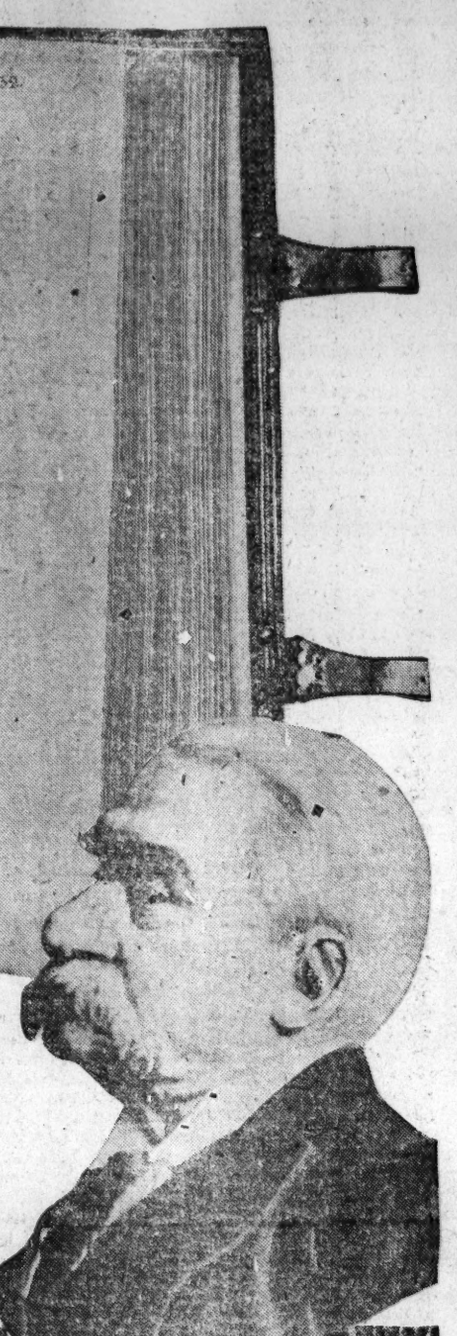
"What'll we give Liz for Christmas?"

"Why not give her a book?" suggests Maggie, and Mamie replies with scorn:

"But she's already got a book."

This is still considered a very funny joke by certain contemporary Americans—but the point would have been utterly missed in Italy or England when Dante and Chaucer lived, for then it was a rare privilege to have "a book." It was only after the invention of printing that the possession of books became common.

Harold Bell Wright and Ethel M. Dell to-day think nothing of seeing a latest novel run into an edition counted by the millions, requiring a forest of trees and tons of ink to print, whirled off electric presses like falling leaves in Autumn. It is doubtful whether the divine Dante and the immortal Chaucer had an actual "circulation" of more than a few scant hundred copies of their great works before they died. They didn't write for money. One of these old manuscripts probably cost the elder Mr. Morgan more money than Dante and Chaucer combined ever made out of the profession of literature during their whole lives.



The Late J. Pierpont Morgan, Financier and Founder of the Library.

"Christ Mocked by the Roman Soldiers." An Etching by Rembrandt in the Morgan Collection.

An extremely interesting feature of some of the old illuminated manuscripts in the Morgan collection is the mode of inserting pictorial illustrations in the body of the text. From the very first it was a quite usual thing to let these illustrations wander where they would over the pages, and then fit the text around them.

A little later this method of illustration was more or less discarded, and for centuries most pictorial illustrations in books occupied entire pages to themselves. This latter arrangement is still true of most books published to-day, but practically all modern magazines which publish illustrated fiction have gone back to the older idea of letting the picture take precedence in the "make-up" of the page, and arranging the type irregularly to fit around it.

Two Good Features For Isis Patrons

Two good features are billed at the Isis Theater during the coming week. "Riders Up," a stirring racing episode from the story "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," by Creighton Hale, will be shown on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Starting Thursday, Norma Talmadge will be seen in a seven-part feature picture, "De Luxe Annie."

The Isis management announces for early presentation "Robin Hood," Douglas Fairbanks' latest and greatest picture, which because of its tremendous magnitude and fine acting has been hailed by critics everywhere as an outstanding achievement in cinema art.

"Riders Up," is a story of race track life, and the hero is a tout. Persons familiar with the manner of men who make a living by disposing of information concerning race horses have branded it one of the most convincing stories ever told of race track activities.

The picture was filmed in Tia Juana, real races and many real track and stable attaches being shown as atmosphere. Creighton Hale, George Cooper, Robert Brower, Kate Price and Edith Yorke are in the cast.

The story is that of a youth who drifted on to the race track after saying goodbye to his widowed mother and his sister in a little New England village. They believed him engaged in a big business venture and are waiting anxiously for him to keep his oft-made promise to come home.

Finally he has a lucky day and prepares to keep his promise but the plight of an aged friend convinces him that he is justified in once more postponing the visit.

"De Luxe Annie, which will be shown on Thursday at the Isis is vastly different from the average crook play, and, by the same token, infinitely superior. It is the story of a finely bred women whose husband is interested in criminal psychology and who is herself transformed into a criminal by an accident. The crime, she practices is the "de-luxe game," an adaptation of the old badger game in which the woman poses as a roller of de-luxe editions and invigles some individual with a weakness for pretty girls, whereupon her male confederate breaks into the scene and blackmails the victim whom he has found in an embarrassing position with his "wife."

Norma Talmadge is especially suited for the title role in this screen drama since it calls for not only beauty, style and a high order of artistry in the star, but also for an innate intelligence and an intellectual background vouchsafed by the gods to but few of us. Miss Talmadge's performance brings out every shade of emotional feeling in her portrayal of this crook part, lifting it far out of the commonplace by the force of her vivid personality as well as by the odd psychological twist of the story.

Miss Talmadge's leading man is Eugene O'Brien. One of the important male roles has been entrusted to Frank Mills, whose polished acting is familiar to both playgoers' and film fans. Other leading members of the cast include Edward Davis, Fred R. Stanton, Joseph Burke, Edna Hunter, David Burns, and little Harriet Jenkins—a winning aggregation in the support of a supreme star.

A NEW VERSION OF MARY'S GREATEST HIT

MARY PICKFORD in "TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY"

Mary Pickford Film Feature At Carlton

When Mary Pickford got through instructing Frank B. Ormston, her art director, as to how she wanted the reproduction of the lowly fishermen's village built for her new photoplay version of "Tess of the Storm Country," which will be first shown at the Carlton Theater at today's matinee, he says he felt just as if he had been plunged into a combination house wrecking and junk business.

This feeling was inspired by Miss Pickford's emphatic determination to attain actual realism by having a "set" in which real dilapidation should be unmistakable. As described by Grace Miller White in her famous "best-seller" novel from which this photoplay was adapted, this center of the activities of the lovable Tess constituted a veritable last word in tumble-down shacks and shanties.

The requirements of this production, so explicity explained by the star, sent Mr. Ormston on a quest of old things in general which extended over a period of five weeks and covered most of Southern California. In San Diego he found a queer old house built forty-three years ago. He bought the whole thing, took it apart, crated and shipped it to Chatsworth Lake, the site selected for the village, where he put it together again and made it one of the dozen or more complete and practical huts in the "set."

Up near Santa Barbara he found a particularly old-fashioned doorstep, which soon found its way onto the shores of Chatsworth. It was on one of the oldest ranches in America that he found the hut which served as the picture home of the Longmans, Ezra, the younger of whom, cuts such a wide swath in the story through his persistency in foisting his ill-advised love upon the heroine. The shack of Ben Letts, the villain, came from a real fishermen's village in Lower California, as did also Tess's thoroughly dilapidated cabin. All the boats and fishing paraphernalia came from various long abandoned Pacific coast fishing points.

When Mr. Ormston completed his task of erecting this motion picture fishing village a Los Angeles newspaper editor proclaimed it "the oldest looking bunch of dilapidation and the most remarkable example of realism" he had ever seen in all his years of identification with the motion picture industry. "Even the old board walk creaked as if it had endured about its last hundred years of usefulness" he added, "And the most amazing thing of all to me was that the

Film Idols This Week At The Apollo

Gloria Swanson and Rodolph Valentino have achieved a splendid success in "Beyond the Rocks," a new feature film which will be the attraction at the Apollo Theater this week. The first performance will be this afternoon at 5:30 o'clock.

"Beyond the Rocks," is first, last and always entertainment. It teaches no moral, yet it has a moral standard; in fact, it is this moral standard which gives the picture character.

Dedicated to youth and love, "Beyond the Rocks," is an expression of unquestioned faith in romance. In almost every scene and sub-title, the author, Elinor Glyn, has conveyed the idea that romance can never die, that it has been and always will be the supreme influence in the life of every normal young person. This may sound like propaganda, but it is not presented as such. It is a pure love story, with a certain tang of hopeless that increases the appeal.

Pictorially, the scenes show detailed labor and good taste, The English cottages at the opening, the rescue in the Alps, the pageant and the delightful costumes that go with it, and finally the climax on the desert characterize the picture as one that has style.

The directing, by Sam Wood, invests every scene with grace. Gloria Swanson, with a magnificen array of clothes is always a delightful figure, and Rodolph Valentino, not only acts but is the Prince Charming for whom his feminine admirers everywhere have shown so marked a preference.

"Dangerous Blonde" At St. George's

"The Dangerous Blonde," the Laura La Plante picture which is booked for St. George's Open-Air Cinema Theater this week, was directed by Robert F. Hill, the man who made "Excitement," her first starring vehicle.

When Laura La Pante played opposite Reginald Denny in "Sporting Youth," after a long series of leading roles in various Universal pictures, her work marked her conspicuously for stardom. When "Excitement" was prepared, it was decided to give this new-picked star the best guidance, story and cast obtainable.

In the supporting cast are such well known players as Edward Hearn, Arthur Hoyt, Dick Sutherland, Margaret Campbell, Philo McCullough, Eve Southern, Rolfe Sedan and Frederick Cole.

The original story from which Hugh Hoffman prepared the screen version of "The Dangerous Blonde" was Hulbert Footner's "A New Girl in Town," published in Argosy Magazine.

shacks actually held together and did not fall down."

Not every one of the several huts was practical and the interiors of all were used either as dressing-rooms or storage places for equipment. There was no make-believe about this "set." It was real in all the word implies and as it registers in "Tess of the Storm Country" no one ever will mistake it for artificial "props" such as are so commonly used in film plays.

'Kean' Will Be Feature At Olympic

Featured on the program of the Olympic Theater for the coming week is "Kean," a picturisation of Alexandre Dumas' masterpiece, which starts its run at the Olympic on Thursday.

The story is that of the life of Edmund Kean, one of Britain's foremost actors of the last century. At the height of his fame, Kean fell in love with the beautiful Countess Von Koefeld, wife of the Danish ambassador to Engand. Deft and magnetic in the portrayals of the characters of his beloved author Shakespeare he would most surely have attained new heights in his noble art and gained more glory, had he not become a prisoner to his unfortunate passion, which finally drove him mad and made him die in miserable surroundings, forgotten and abandoned by all his former friends and admirers and hunted by his innumerable creditors.

The screen version of this best work of the famous French author, being an unusually truthful adaption, is more than a mere production; it is a picture of love and despair, of dreams, ashes of dreams. . . . A picture that will grip and hold and the poignant appeal of which will reach deep into every human heart.

Mr. Mosjoukine, Europe's greatest dramatic actor on the screen, assisted by an exceptionally talented cast, comprising Madame Nathelie Lissenko and Nic. Koline, is enacting a role of heavy dramatic exactions and he succeeds in registering almost the entire gamut of emotions in a manner of such certainty that his work in "Kean" touches probably the uppermost point of the dramatic attainments of his career.

Victoria Offers Two Good Films

The Victoria Theater has announced for presentation starting on Monday "The Lone Star Ranger," a picturisation of Zane Grey's story. Starting Wednesday, there will be shown "Poisoned Paradise, a sensational story of an adventures at Monte Carlo.

William Farnum is the leading male actor in "The Lone Star Ranger," and he brings to this character of the western plains a charm and knowledge of his part which makes the picture one of the best which he has ever enacted. He plays the role of a Texas ranger who invades a town held in the grip of cattle rustlers. His encounters with the outlaws are of an exciting character. Eventually, he avenges the death of a fallen comrade, cleans up the gang singlehanded and wins the love of the heroine.

"Poisoned Paradise," is the story of a pleasure-mad girl who moved in the inner circles of Monte Carlo's fashionable life. Vivacious and possessed of a captivating beauty, her adventures at Monte Carlo, in London, Paris and New York, are of intriguing interest. The cast of the play includes Kenneth Harlan, Carmel Myers, Barbara Tennant, Josef Swickard, Evelyn Selbie and Frankie Lee. The film is particularly noteworthy for its splendid settings and gorgeous costuming.

Yiddish Art Theater Now Playing In London

(From Our Own Correspondent)

London, April 25.—The Yiddish Art Theater of America, which has for a number of years been operating in New York with conspicuous success, is now playing at the Scala Theater for its first time in London. "Shabbethai Zebi," by J. Julawsky, is the name of the play and Mr. Swartz acts the part of Shabbethai with marked effect.

As an historical figure, Shabbethai Zebi must be almost unknown to dramatists; how otherwise could his story, magnificent in its universality, for so long have escaped dramatic treatment? There are few of us who do not, in some measure, seek to achieve a following by means of "bounce" —even if it be only the bounce of humility. And it is psychologically remarkable that, having achieved our following, great or small, we are all liable to lose sight of the means by which it has been achieved and to be deceived by our own deception. When the multitude cheers us, we cannot help feeling that, after all, there must be something in it, and we cheer with the multitude. So Shabbethai Zebi who, in the seventeenth century, posed as a Messiah because he longed to liberate the Jews, probably did begin to think that he might indeed be the Messiah when he found himself so accepted by others and, to demonstrate his invulnerability, even consented that the Sultan should shoot three poisoned arrows at his naked breast. But a thunderstorm intervened, and, destroying his reputation, saved his soul. It is a wonderful story, and although most of us may find some difficulty in the Yiddish, yet even the synopsis given on the program is enough to set one thinking for a week. Of the merits of the play itself, I am not able to judge, but the theme has undoubtedly very great dramatic possibilities.

ANOTHER GOOD PLAY

"Tonight's the Night," by Fred Thompson, at the Winter Garden Theater, is one of the best plays of its kind. The new tunes, as well as some of the old ones, are very pretty, and the play is full of fun. Leslie Henson, the comedian is very amusing, while Miss Heather Thatcher is so popular that when she appears the audience spontaneously bursts out in uproarious enthusiasm. This play has no obstacles in the way of thorough entertainment to those who can grant that physical beauty is the passport to Heaven, that no real gentleman would greet a real lady without a big box of chocolates and that it is funny when the children of ugly parents get the measles!

THE WHITE SISTER

This film, now showing at the Rivoli—London's newest and finest picture-house—is a startling example of moving-picture art. It is based on the story by F. Marion Crawford and produced by Henry King for the Inspiration Pictures, Inc.

Miss Lillian Gish, who plays the part of "The White Sister," has been described as one of the best reasons why Providence allowed Colombus to discover America. Certainly this film is in itself sufficient reason why Providence allowed somebody to discover the cinema, while the lovely Lillian alone would fully justify the making of the film.

The story is clearly unfolded in a series of pictures as lucid and honest as Biblical English and the acting of everybody, notably of Miss Gish, is faultless. This film is very popular and is sure to have a long and successful run in London.

APPEARS IN CONCERT HERE

MISS ROSL SCHACK

Shanghai music-lovers will be given one more opportunity to hear Miss Rosl Schack and Mr. Otto Beck, Viennese operatic artists, who will appear in a concert of light operatic numbers at the Lyceum Theater on Tuesday evening of this week. Miss Schack and Mr. Beck have already given two concerts at the Lyceum, at both of which they were well received by large and appreciative audiences. Following Tuesday's concert, they will go north to fulfil engagements is Peking and Tientsin and later continue on to Japan, where they are booked for an extensive tour.

Miss Schack was premier soubrette at the Viennese Burger Operatic Theater and Mr. Beck leading tenor at the Viennese Operatic Theater. Prior to coming to Shanghai, they appeared successfully in recitals in India, the Straits Settlement, Java, and Hongkong.

The program for Tuesday night's concert is entirely new, and will include many of the latest Viennese light operatic hits. Among other numbers, are selections from "Madame Pompadour," "The Blue Mazurka," "The Gypsy Princess," "The Dutch Girl," and "Carnival Fairy," all of which have had long runs recently in the light operatic theaters of Vienna.

Theaters Flourish In New York

New York, May 10.—New York grasps at any straw likely to lessen the jostling that is the daily experience of the homeward bound in late afternoon. Fifteen theaters changed their matinee opening hours recently in order to help spread the crowds, and from transit officials came gateful expressions of appreciation and pressions of appreciation and relief. Even fifteen theaters can make a difference, though fifteen is but a drop in New York's amusement bucket.

Almost fifteen hundred licensed amusement resorts, theaters, moving picture places, dance and concert halls are flourishing in Greater New York today, or about one-fifth more than were in operation five years ago. In this list the 705 dance halls take the lead numerically, though the movies carry off most honors in competition.

Five hundred and seventy-eight movie places, enumerated in a recent survey, show an increase of about 36 percent since 1919; while theaters have increased 25 percent in number and dance halls 11 percent. No additions have been made to the three concert halls since 1919.

There are almost three times as many moving picture places as theaters, and their combined seating capacity is almost twice that of the theaters. But from the city's point of view the movies are not correspondingly profitable. Revenues received annually from theater licenses total $98,000, from motion picture places $81,000, from dance halls $25,250 and from concert halls $1,500.

In spite of the depression of 1920-21, the number of amusement places did not decrease during that period. With prohibition the number of dance halls was found to have dropped more than 250 in 1920, but by 1924 the 1920 figure had been almost doubled. Since 1920, according to the survey, carnivals have multiplied. Taxes fro mcarnivals and circuses amount annually to more than $60,000.

Theaters, movies, concert halls all combined can accommodate almost oneteenth of the population of Greater New York at a single time. And the crowds of resident amusement seekers are swelled by multitudes from out of town.

Needed— A Soul For The Cinema

Eleven years ago Frank Lloyd abandoned stage productions to enter motion pictures, and, in order to get his start in the films he is said to have accepted a position paying $5 a day. In six months he was writing, playing leading parts and directing his own productions. Among those he has put forth are "Mme. X," "The Silver Horde," "Les Miserables," "The Sin Flood," "Woman in Room 13," "The Enternal Flame," "Within the Law," "Oliver Twist" and "Ashes of Venggance." The other day he was quoted as saying that the future of pictures is often alluded to in questions to him, and that almost as frequently he replied that pictures must be given a soul.

"Whereas in the past, spectacle, technical novelty, elaboration and mechanical effect have brought out our greatest triumph," says Mr. Lloyd," the future must bring forth artistry, understanding and study, which can only come by way of careful, concentrated work. Where we have been creating 'songs' in the past, we must create 'symphonies' in the future. Where we have been 'tricksters' and 'assemblers' in the past, we must be real 'artists' and 'spiritualists' in the future. By 'we' I mean producers, directors, author, actors, technicians, in fact all interested in the making of a film play for the public.

GREAT DEVELOPMENT

"In the last five years the art of photography has developed more than it developed for sixty years previously. Studio lighting has reached such a point that it justifies recognition as a distinct science. Properties have become so good that they deceive expert craftsman; we have made miniatures of airplane wrecks and ship disasters, duplicated some of the great architectural achievements, and we have even made artifical spider webs. At a moment's notice we have injected scenarios, and have manufactured thrills, suspense and romance to fit the occasion.

"In fear that our idea might not hit the mark we have exaggerated life and we have missed most of the sweetness, the delicacy, the fine fabric which is real, impressive and thoroughly satisfying to behold. There are some pictures which will always live as masterpieces of dramatic and cinematic achevement, but they are too few. The future success in studio work depends on those who know their subject, not think they know it; those who observe, study and accurately interpret. Our pictures must be a part of us; we must not manufacture a story to match our weakness; we must build our strength to match good stories.

GIVE THEM A SOUL

"Indeed the greatest advancement that can be recorded in the future history of the screen will be noted in giving the motion picture a soul—that inspirational depth it has little known before and cannot progress without. Every man and woman interested in the making of a motion picture must do his or her full share for the advancement of screen art.

"The author must write about subjects he knows intimately. It isn't necessary to have a train wreck, an automobile chase a half dozen murders, million-dollar settings in every story. Stories must possess sincerity, a clearly defined moral, must accurately describe life—there must be real genius visible in the network of every theme. One real good situation may be sufficient to make a story an immortal triumph if it has quality —not just quantity of dramatic incident.

"The producer must assist the creators of screen plays by allowing sufficient time to make picture's correctly. No great masterpiece of art has ever been made according to a time clock. Money must not regulate a picture's greatness. One story may cost a million dollars and another equally as impressive only fifty thousand. The producer must select his story wisely and his directors and actors carefully. which prohibits the progress of The producer must encourage new ideas, new methods, not establish a hard and fast rule which prohibits the progress of art.

DIRECTOR MUST LEAD

"The director must study his story. He should inspire his actors in their work, not command them or drive them. He must create the atmosphere of the production by his thorough understanding of his subject. His superior knowledge of the subject, his judgment in every emergency, must be established and respected. He must lead, not direct, and still he must permit each actor to express his personality, his individualism, hs ideas, lest his productions become overbalanced.

"Perhaps the greatest advancement the screen is to know must come from the actor, as it is the player the audience sees and from whom so much is expected. The actor must live his part, however small; he must knew his character, He must not be visibly acting; his gestures must be natural, typical and accurate."

WILL SING TODAY

MISS AKIKO SEKI

Miss Akiko Seki, talented Japanese soprano, will appear in a concert at the Carlton Cafe this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Her program is especially designed to appeal to foreigners.

BANK FAILURE OUTSTANDING FEATURE OF MONEY MART

Yen And Franc Appreciation Attract Notice

CHINESE BUYING

Interesting Notes And Comment On Financial Affairs

The outstanding features of the money market for the past week were the failure of the Chinese Merchants' Bank, and the appreciation of the yen and the franc. Silver, quoted at 35⅛ on Tuesday, closed yesterday at 34⅞, or a drop of ⅛ for the period, and rates eased off accordingly.

The local market opened Tuesday with sellers at 71¾ and 71⅞ gold dollars, near and forward respectively; Sterling, 3/3⅛ near, and ¾ forward; yen, 57¼, near and 57⅛ forward.

A prominent development of the market on Tuesday was the heavy buying of yen by Chinese speculators. It was reported that they had been carrying a large oversold position in this currency, but with the continued advance of the yen in New York and London, they apparently decided to cover without risking more on their position.

On Tuesday the yen rate advanced continuously until 57⅝ was reached just before tiffin, and after tiffin it was reported that business was done at 57½. It was estimated on Tuesday that Chinese speculators had bought approximately Y. 3,000,000. The advance in the yen rate had a depressing effect on gold dollars and Sterling.

The yen rate continued to advance until 58¼ was reached on Friday. News of weakness in New York caused the market to ease off to 57⅜ yesterday.

FRANCS STEADIED

Political conditions have had a steadying effect on francs, particularly when news of M. Millerand's resignation was received. The appreciation was practically 6 percent in one day in New York and London with local buyers at 13.50. Later news caused a slight weakness, but it is generally believed in the money market that the election of M. Doumergue to the Presidency will result in the appointment of M. Herriot, who, it is understood, plans a conference with the British Prime Minister, Mr. MacDonald. As a result of these encouraging signs, it is believed that there will be a further appreciation of the franc in the near future.

Silver was down ⅛ in London and unchanged in New York on Wednesday. The quotations were given as 35 and 67 respectively. Our market was on the steady side throughout the day, with good sellers, gold dollars, 71⅞ and Sterling, 3/3⅛. This condition probably was due to the fact that the Chinese had covered their oversold position in yen on the previous two days.

Silver was down ⅛ in London and ¼ in New York on Thursday with the quotations given as 35 and 67, with the cross rate up ¼ and the quotation at 4.31¼. For a few minutes at the opening, our market was inclined to be steady, but there appeared several good buyers at 3/3⅛ and 71⅛ and the market turned to the easy side and remained so throughout the day. Buyers of Sterling at 3/3⅛ and gold dollars, 71⅝, were found at the close.

Sterling was down ⅛ in London and ⅝ in New York on Friday, with the quotations given as 34⅛ and 66⅜ respectively. The local market was rather uncertain throughout the day. Chinese speculators at times bought in small amounts, which had the tendency slightly to weaken the rates, but a fair seller would appear, and the market was on the easy side most of the time.

BANK SUSPENSION

The only reports relative to the closing of the China Merchants' Bank, a Cantonese institution, are rumors from Hongkong that the Bank was overbought between two and three million pounds Sterling. The local manager asserts that the Shanghai office was in good condition and that he only acted on orders from Hongkong to suspend payment. Also it is learned from another reliable source that the position of the Shanghai branch was quite good, and that on net outstanding exchange contracts, differences were in its favor. This report was further confirmed by the statements of other local the branch. The weakness appears banks which had contracts with to be in Hongkong.

Use Of Rubber Footwear Is Universal Among Esthonians

They Like Them Low And Removable Without Use Of The Hands

The use of rubber footwear is universal in Esthonia, Consul H. B. Quarton reports from Reval. Last year 139.7 long tons of this commodity were imported, mainly from Germany.

The low galosh is most widely used and two styles are equally in demand, the medium pointed toe to fit the modern type of shoe, and a broad high toe to fit the old fashioned shoes still in vogue among certain classes. During the cold season galoshes with a woolen lining are preferred; however, in spring and summer there is a limited demand for cotton-lined galoshes. Galoshes for this market should be sufficiently stiff to permit their being put on and taken off without the use of the hands; galoshes of thin rubber which have to be drawn on and off cannot be sold here.

In the winter the so called snow-shoes, i.e., a rubber-soled black cloth topped boot of medium height reaching over the ankle and closed by clasps, is popular for children's wear and to a certain extent for women.

Retail prices of galoshes range from 550 to 700 Esthonian marks for men's galoshes and from 450 to 555 for women's (378½ Esthonian marks equal $1.00. Wholesale prices range from 490 to 600 Esthonian marks for men's and 390 to 475 marks for women's sizes. The import duty on galoshes is 0.75 gold francs per net kilogram, payable in Esthonian currency at the rate of exchange temporarily fixed by the Government at 75 marks to one gold franc.

Local dealers believe that an extension of liberal credit terms is the chief prerequisite for the expansion of America's shares of the available business in rubber footwear. It is believed to be advisable to establish a small consignment stock in Reval, in charge of a reliable local firm, which will eliminate delays in delivery.

Industry May Heal Japan-U.S. Breach

Admiral Takeda Of Mitsubishi Interests Is In U.S.A. On Mission

Pittsburgh, May 2.—Admiral Hideo Takeda, of the Japanese Imperial Navy, retired, and a financial industrial leader of Japan, who arrived in Pittsburgh yesterday, declared the breach between the United States and Japan is very regrettable and entirely due to a misunderstanding.

"The educated people of Japan realise that immigration is a question of internal affairs and they had no intention of interfering with the Government of this country," declared the Admiral.

Admiral Takeda is chairman of the board of the Mitsubishi Electric and Engineering Co., Mitsubishi Shipbuilding Co., Mitsubishi Steel Co., and president of the Mitsubishi Mining Co. His party was received by I. F. Baker, manager of the Japan office of the Westinghouse Electric International Co., and was taken to the works of the Westinghouse Co. at East Pittsburgh, where he will leave several of the engineers included in his party to study the latest developments in the electrical industry.

Commenting at further length on the Japanese exclusion feature of the immigration Bill, Admiral Takeda said "Commercial relations should form the basis of cementing the friendly relations between our countries and should lead to a better understanding. I believe the immigration question could have been settled in a better way through diplomatic circles, but it is now the duty of the industrial leaders now the duty of the industrial leaders of both countries to do all in their power to cement any existing breach."

The Admiral and his party were tendered a dinner at the Pittsburg Golf Club this evening by officials the Westinghouse interests. He will visit many of the industrial plants located in Pittsburg and will leave for Niagara Falls Monday, where he will visit the Canadian Westinghouse Electric Co.

DISCUSS NATURE OF CREDITS FOR SOVIET RUSSIA

Delegates Want Money To Satisfy Industry's Immediate Needs

The secretary of the Soviet Delegation in London, Mr. Y. D. Yanson, discussed with me the other day the nature of the credits sought by the Soviet Government, says a London correspondent to the Manchester Guardian. For the moment, he said, they were compelled to defer the big questions of the development of the national resources, and were seeking only such credits as were required urgently for their more immediate wants. I questioned him as to the objects for which the credits are required, roughly what proportion of them could be met by the Exports Credit scheme, that is, by foods manufactured in this country, what proportion of the requirement was in cash; and in which branches of British industry the orders would mainly be placed. He replied that the national economy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics required for its restoration and development the application of new capital in its various branches, but the nature of the credit operations would vary considerably, depending in each case on the peculiarities of the various enterprises.

"On the one hand it is necessary to obtain on a sufficiently large scale normal short-term bank credit for financing certain export operations, for instance the preparation of timber goods, furs, the products of the poultry and cattleraising business, and also for the purchase of raw materials which are not produced in the country, or are produced in insufficient quantity, such as raw rubber, cotton, and merino wool. In the other hand, there are a number of branches of national industry in need of a more extended credit. Among these are, for instance, the supply to the agricultural population of complicated agricultural implements which would necessitate credits for a term of five to six years. Lastly, there are a number of manufacturing enterprises which need to be extended and reequipped—in some cases to be completely rebuilt. It follows that in this case the term of the credit must be extended over 20 years and longer.

"In the last-mentioned case the credit must be of a "mixed" nature, that is, supplied partly in goods and partly in money, as the undertaking may find its own resources insufficient to instal and start the plant to work and to carry out the building operations connected with the enlargement of the enterprise. It would, however, be difficult to indicate what would have to be the proportion between the goods and money parts of the credit, without going into an analysis of the financial position of each individual undertaking to which credits could usefully be extended, and without taking into account the possibility of credit being granted by banks in the U.S.S.R.

CREDIT IN GOODS

"It should be borne in mind," he continued, "that only in rare cases would credit be applied to new enterprises; it is a question almost exclusively of existing enterprises, the working of which requires modernising. As far as the goods portion of the credits is concerned orders could be placed with British shipyards, engineering and electrical works, and also with works manufacturing complex agricultural machinery.

"The shipyards could be given orders for steam and oil-driven ships and for sea-going barges, of which a great need is felt in the country. This would, among other things, render possible a considerable increase in the exports to the United Kingdom of crude oil and oil products. British engineering works could undertake the execution of orders for the re-equipment of textile mills, which stand in great need of it, as this branch of the industry is mostly equipped with British-made machinery, the importation of which into Russia ceased ten years ago. Further, it would be necessary to equip wood-working factories; this would tend to facilitate and cheapen the exports of timber to Great Britain. Apart from this, orders could be placed for special plant for collieries (drills, cutting machines, &c.), and for machinery for metal working, electro-technical works, and railway workshops. British metal construction works could get orders for equipping grain elevators and ports in certain parts of the country.

"Agricultural machinery manufacturers could have orders for the more complex kind of machines (harvesters, &c.) as the change-over to more intensive methods in agriculture now faces the country as a whole. Lastly, electrical machinery manufacturers could supply plant for the electrification of certain sections of the railways and of certain industrial areas."

Piece Goods

Messrs. Ilbert and Co.'s piece goods market report under date June 13 states:

Whilst it is too early as yet for a general resumption of business after the Dragon Festival, there are already signs of a slight improved tone all round, more in the form of better clearances and fresh enquiries than in the matter of prices which still continue inordinately low considering the strong statistical position of the cloth market.

Hankow is our best customer at the moment but welcome news is to hand to the effect that the imposition of the 1 percent tax on all goods entering the province of Szechuen has now been withdrawn under strong pressure by the various native commercial organisations and it is expected that substantial shipments will therefore go up River in the near future.

Prospects in the Northern markets are far from re-assuring as the Spring crops have been practically a failure all over owing to the long spells of drought in recent months, and enquiries for goods for those regions are practically nil at the moment.

Manchester being closed for the usual week's holiday during Whitweek there is no news to report from that market.

Grey Shirtings 8¼ lbs.—Our market has re-opened after the native holidays with a distinct revival in enquiry, and prices at the auctions show a strengthening tendency. Details of private sales are as follows:—Black Joss at Tls. 6.30, Palace at Tls. 6.10, and Red Joss at Tls. 5.75.

9-11 lbs.—We hear of business in Rabbit and Moon at Tls. 8.65, Red Cock at Tls. 7.00, Bridge at Tls. 7.35, Palace at Tls. 7.25. Auction values very steady.

12 lbs. 36-in.—Sales are recorded in Red Cock and Soldier D.D.D. at Tls. 10.50, Soldier No. 1 A.A. at Tls. 10.50. Auction values slightly higher than last week.

White Shirtings.—Some considerable private sales have been brought to our notice for the River Ports and although the rates quoted are slightly lower than recently obtained there is evidence of increasing demand and higher prices are looked for. Details of private sales are as follows:—Gold Dollar at Tls. 13.50, Large Red Dog at Tls. 11.76, Small Red Dog at Tls. 11.25, Five Gold Bats at Tls. 11.25, Nine Gold Tai at Tls. 10.50, Nine Boys at Tls. 9.50, Fireworks at Tls. 6.65.

Local Sheetings.—There has been a revival of enquiry and sellers are holding out for higher prices.

Dyed and Fancy Cottons.—Sales are reported in Fast Blacks for the North at bargain prices but the understone of our market would appear to be firm and a general advance is recorded in auction values.

Cotton.—The market for China grades has been quite unaffected by the substantial fall in prices in America during the past two weeks, the quantity of good spinning cotton now available here being exceedingly small. Prices still remain on the basis of Tls. 46½ to Tls. 48.00 for Shensi.

Yarn.—Some slight improvement is noticeable since the Dragon Boat Festival, clearances being a little weightier and some small fresh purchases being made as follows:

No. 10's.—100 Bales Chelin at Tls. 163.00.

No. 12's.—100 Bales Teenkwan at Tls. 173.00.

No. 16's.—500 Bales Wedding at Tls. 176.00.

No. 20's.—800 Bales Man and Goats at Tls. 188.00, 800 Bales Five Men at Tls. 188.00 and 200 Bales Three Joss at Tls. 189.50.

Japanese Get Mukden Permit To Build Railway

(Reuter's Service)

Moscow, June 13.—It is reported here that the Japanese have concluded an agreement with Mukden whereby, without permission of the Peking Government, the Japanese will be allowed to construct a branch railway from Taonanfu to Tsitsihar. This will enable them to dispense with the Chinese Eastern and Ussuri Railways.

The East Window

THE New York Times for May 16, in the course of an "obituary" editorial dealing with the life and place in history of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, rate the democratic leader of Canton as one of the "three big figures in Asia's history of the last twenty-five years, the other two being Gandhi and Kemal Pasha." Since Dr. Sun still lives in spite of the news dispatches of a couple of weeks ago telling of his demise, he doubtless will be considerably interested in the Times' estimate of his contribution to the welfare of the Chinese Republic: "The chief instrument in the overthrow of the Manchus and the first President of the Chinese Republic, he came to be regarded in his later years as one of the main obstacles to national appeasement and reconstruction. Dr. Sun's death may bring nearer an end of hostilities between North and South China. That will be a gain, but it will leave unsolved the most difficult problem confronting the Chinese people—it may be that if he had placed his talents at the service of Peking the struggle against the Tuchuns would have shown more gratifying results. . . It may not be altogether a paradox to suggest that the process of China's awakening might have been accelerated if China's perils from the outside had come a little nearer home than they actually did. There is nothing like a good dose of foreign domination to wipe out separatist tendencies within a backward country and foster the national spirit. . . Gandhi in India and Kemal Pasha in Turkey have been successful in building up a national spirit because they have had to deal with an 'enemy' from the outside. China, left alone by the Powers, has not yet found the remedy against factionalism."

Missionaries and peanuts provides the subject for an interesting paragraph in the June bulletin of the College of Agriculture and Forestry of Nanking University. It seems that the foreign peanut (groundnut) was introduced into China from the United States about 35 years ago by Archdeacon Thompson of the American Church Mission, who brought out with him four quarts of peanuts and divided them equally with Dr. Charles R. Mills of the American Presbyterian Mission (North) who was on the way to Tengchowfu in Penglaihsien, Shantung. Dr. Mills divided his portion of the peanuts among two Chinese farmers who were members of his church. One of the farmers ate all of his crop at the end of the first season, but the other preserved his and the third year the seed was distributed generally. Considerable difficulty was at first experienced in extracting the oil from the American peanuts on account of the thick shell, but this was later overcome by shelling the nuts. The value of China's peanut crop is now estimated to the extent of millions of dollars annually both from the standpoint of foreign commerce and domestic consumption, and that the Chinese in Shantung appreciate the importance of the introduction is testified by a large stone tablet memorialising the virtues of the foreign peanut which has been erected in the Yamen of the Magistrate of the Penglahsien district. The chief value of the American style peanut is its ability to grow on land too poor for other crops, and according to the Bulletin "it is difficult to estimate the benefits which the farmers have derived from this missionary introduction."

Several of the leading American trade publications have been devoting considerable attention recently to the lack of modern roads in China. The Manufacturers' Record, in referring to the subject, said: "The men who are building good roads are laying the foundation for building the people of a country up to a higher standard. The building of good roads is the uplifting power for any people. It changes their outlook on life. It broadens their material potentialities, and adds to their moral and spiritual and educational opportunities." To this comment the Nation's Business, published in Washington, D.C., adds; "Opposite the plight of China, with its impassable and impossible roads and its stagnant civilisation, shall we set the achievements of the United States?" And the achievements of America along the line of modern road construction are given by Automobile Topics as follows: Throughout the entire United States there is a total of 430,000 miles of hard-surfaced roads. This is the completed record at the end of 1923." According to the same publication, a half century ago it required from three to six months for a person to cross the United States by wagon over roads probably little better than those of China today. Now, according to recently compiled statistics, 60,000 automobiles passed east and west across the United States on one highway alone, the Lincoln Highway, last season. Now, to turn again to the situation of China from the standpoint of modern roads, we find the National Road Construction Association of China, the only organisation in the country which is devoting its attention to road construction propaganda, devoting its activities according to recent report, to the matter of building a road around the foreign Settlements of Shanghai for the avowed purpose of preventing the foreign controlled municipalities of Shanghai from extending their modern system of streets and roads into the countryside surrounding Shanghai. Thus is China working to keep abreast of progress in other parts of the world!

Any person who enters the city of Peking, the capital of China, with any sort of baggage is stopped at the city gate while a number of unifomed gentlemen bearing the insignia of the Government search the baggage for articles which may be subject to taxation. This Peking tax or "octroi" to use the French word, is part of the internal revenue system of China, a bit of mediaevalism brought down to the present, which is always a source of interest to the foreign travelers in the modern Chinese Republic. In early days this tax did not amount to much and was one of the appurtenances of the Emperor and later of the Presidential office. In recent years, however, since the provincial military officials began withholding revenues from the Central Government, the Peking Octroi has become of tremendous importance as one of the chief remaining sources of revenue for the Central Government, or at least what is left of the Government of China. In 1914, according to figures recently published in one of the Shanghai papers, the Octroi yielded $996,937 but in 1923 under careful management it jumped to $2,698,163. From 1918 to 1919 the proceeds of the octroi went direct to the Ministry of Finance and from there transmitted to the Presidential Office, but now with the decadence of public confidence it is gobbled up at the source for specific purposes such as the support of General Feng's (the Christian General's troops), the Chinese students, Primary and Middle Schools, Judicial Reform, Ministry of War, Sinking Fund for Redemption of Treasury Notes, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Justice and so on. So thus we have the spectacle of the Government of China obtaining its support largely from a mediaeval form of taxation levied upon merchandise taken into the capital city. In many ways the predicament of the Chinese Government from the standpoint of revenues greatly resembles the predicament in which Vienna, the capital of the old, Austro-Hungarian Empire, found itself at the close of the European War. When the world savers at the Versailles Conference got through with the remaking of the map of Central Europe, Vienna found itself with all of the machinery of a great and magnificent Government, but with very little country left in which to function. This was the primary cause of the serious financial situation which immediately developed in Austria after the close of the war, for Vienna found itself unable to retrench and finally had to ask the help of the League of Nations and a foreign financial administrator. Peking is in almost the same plight. The provinces have practically all become independent of the Central Government and have held up the revenues, and as a result Peking finds itself with all the machinery of a great Government but with nothing to govern except the population of the capital city, which probably does not number more than a half million souls at the present time. The situation of Peking, with all of the elaborate machinery of government, including a President and Cabinet and Parliament and Foreign Diplomatic Corps, reminds one of some of the extravagant spectacles which have been filmed for the movies in Hollywood. However, there is nothing amusing in the picture for the half million residents in Peking—they are being called upon to put up the money for the support of a Government which should be receiving the revenues of the whole country.

The Japanese Government seems to have worked out the most interesting method of using the balance of the Japanese share of the Boxer Indemnity of any of the foreign Governments which have been worrying about how best to use this money. The Japanese Government, according to a recent dispatch of the Eastern News Agency (Japanese) has established a bureau in the Tokio Foreign Office which carries the name, "Bureau of Japan's Cultural Work in China." Although complete details of the various activities of this Bureau are not available, one interesting phase of its work consists of a sort of super-travel bureau whereby groups of Chinese students and teachers are taken on sight-seeing trips to Japan. A dispatch from Tokio dated June 10 told of the presence of an inspection party of 27 students from Canton under the leadership of a Mr. Liu Chin-tien of the Canton Higher Normal School which had been touring Japan for several weeks, and, in addition to this group, another party consisting of 14 students from Peking was expected in Tokio for the purpose of investigating educational and social conditions. Still another party consisting of 13 Chinese teachers from Canton under the leadership of Mr. Wang Jen-kong, chief of the Canton Educational Bureau, was also in Kwansai district of Japan inspecting and studying educational and social enterprises. In case it is the intention of the Japanese Government to use the major portion of the balance of Japan's share of the Boxer Indemnity amounting to approximately Yen 25,000,000 in conducting these travel parties from China to Japan, the Japanese shipping companies operating in this area should have no cause for complaint on the score of lack of business this season.

The rejection by the Republican National Convention of the so-called La Follette Platform indicates that the Republican regulars are running true to form and there is to be no compromise with radicalism from the standpoint of the major political party in America this year. Although details regarding the content of the Republican platform are not complete, sufficient is given to show the trend:

1.—Endorsement of the administration of Harding and of his successor, President Coolidge.

2.—Adherence to the permanent Court of International Justice.

3.—Approval of America's refusal to join the League of Nations or assume obligations under the Covenant of the League.

4.—Approval of the Administration's participation and co-operation in the humanitarian work of the League.

5.—Support of America's unofficial representation by General Dawes on the Reparations Committee.

6.—Approval of the work of the Wasnington Naval Conference.

7.—Approval of President Coolidge's plans for another Arms Limitation Conference to deal specifically with the reduction of land armament, submarines and use of poison gas in warfare.

8.—The calling of a conference to consider further reduction of armament to be conditional upon the adoption of a permanent reparations plan in Europe which will make negotiations and co-operation in Europe possible.

9.—Domestic provisions in the platform include declarations favoring a protective tariff on imports to protect American labor; endorsement of the elastic provisions in the present tariff law permitting the President to make adjustments to meet varying conditions of world trade; the placing of farmers on an equality with other American industries; favors a Federal system for the co-operative marketing of American products abroad; advocates the organisation of a commission to study the subject of domestic taxation:

10.—Declares emphatically in favor of the payment of European debts to America and holds up as a model the British settlement of her war debt to the United States and condemns the principle of repudiation.

11.—Demands speedy, fearless and impartial prosecution of all wrongdoers in the recent naval oil lease scandals but declares that no greater wrong can be committed against the people than to attempt to destroy their trust in the great body of public officials, thousands of whom are conscientious men.

The New Broom In Japan

DRASTIC financial reforms and departmental readjustments, with a view to avoiding wasteful expenditures, are forecast by statements of the Japanese Minister of Finance and the Minister for Home Affairs, respectively, who are regarded as two of the strong men of the new Tokio Cabinet. The last-named official, in addition, favors the abolition of all investigation boards set up by the former Government and the weeding out of all superfluous officials.

If someone with a statistical bent of mind were to compute precisely how many sinecures are to be found in the administrative machinery of different countries, for which the taxpayer has to find the wherewithal, the data thus secured would furnish a powerful commentary on the wastefulness of governments. Japan is no exception to the rule. One of the most glaring misdeeds of the Government which has just been defeated in that country was the feverish hunt for official positions in the Government. It has been a grave defect in the Japanese educational system that children and young men have not been taught how really poor Japan is in point of natural resources; they have never been taught how to direct their efforts to the promotion of financial prosperity. The country is very limited in extent, is mountainous and hilly. It has coal deposits, though very limited in quantity, while it is extremely short in deposits of iron and oil, for the supply of which it has to rely on other countries. These three articles are essential for maintenance of civilised life. Japan is an agricultural country, but the supply of rice, which is the staple food of her people, is inadequate to support her inhabitants. Nearly every summer, floods destroy rice fields and even human lives while the country loses a great amount of wealth by such recurrent calamities, not the least of which are earthquakes, which take a fearful toll of life and of wealth accumulated by dint of hard labor. To the disadvantage of a not over-bountiful nature is to be added that of frequent terrible visitations. For the period of the Great War there was a more or less artificial wave of prosperity, but Japan has already lost what wealth she acquired through the incidence of that conflict, and her activities in the field of industry are steadily dwindling. The country is suffering from a shortage of essential supplies, yet a not inconsiderable section of the people have not yet freed themselves from the luxurious life to which they have latterly accustomed themselves.

This fatal tendency in the life of the people has invited a timely note of warning from one or two Japanese who can speak on the matter with a voice of authority. That Japan should begin immediately the practice of rigid economy, devote herself to the development of her industries and refrain from floating new foreign loans is the opinion of Mr. R. Ichinomiya, Vice-President of the Yokohama Specie Bank and one of the commissioners sent to New York to negotiate with American bankers for the loan recently floated in the United States and Europe. He utters a specific warning at this juncture against the importation of goods that are not essential to the life of the people. The same warning has been sounded in the past, but, for the most part, has passed unheeded. "It will be twenty years before the last signs of the earthquake have been removed from the Tokio-Yokohama district," said Mr. Manzo Kushida, Managing Director of the Mitsubishi Bank, a few days ago when his opinion regarding the work of reconstruction was asked. The delays that have occurred so far in the execution of the official program of reconstruction have been very wearisome. And although it is announced that the construction of permanent buildings will be permitted from August, the public is justified in wondering whether it will be possible to do so in fact. The work of rebuilding the district in question is a tremendous task and has been made greater by the lack of co-operation in the quarters where it is most needed. Of course, no-one wishes to be unduly pessimistic. It is not the opinion of well-informed men in Japan that a business crisis of any serious nature is imminent. But a difficult period of financial readjustment, already on the way before the earthquake and infinitely more difficult because of the catastrophe, will have to be expected. Shutting one's eyes to the inevitable will lighten the burden for no-one.

All eyes in Japan now are naturally turned towards the party that has triumphed at the recent elections. It is common knowledge that the Kenseikai has been in adverse circumstances for the past ten years, the party having been out of power for that period. It may be easily supposed how eager its members are to get positions in the Government now that the party has come into power. When the Kenseikai organised its own Cabinet years ago, it created many unnecessary posts to satisfy the political aspirations of its members. Now that the party has won the position of the foremost party in the recent election by the co-operation and help of the Seiyukai and the Kakushin Club, it is feared that it may repeat its past practice to secure their continued support. Many Japanese are concerned about this possibility because they know that their party politicians are remarkably lacking in a sense of self-restraint. The present is an unusual opportunity for a reform of executive organs and institutions which are really not needed for practical purposes. It will be interesting to see whether the Kenseikai can accomplish the measures which it has consistently insisted upon for the past ten years, more especially in view of the fact that promises made to the electorate are not invariably executed once a party is in office.

Electricity

Cooking Made Easy.

Electric cooking avoids not only the serious waste of meat inseparable from old-fashioned methods of cooking, it avoids waste of all kinds—waste of some of the most valuable products of a joint, and waste of delicate flavor. The much discussed saving in the weight of meat which follows from electric roasting has now been proved. The saving is owing to no particular virtue of electricity, but to the fact that the oven-heat, regulated with ease by a few switches and a thermometer, can be maintained at the correct degree to cook the meat without the close attention and continuous manipulation of fire and dampers which is necessary to maintain on a coal range even an approximately uniform oven heat.

EXCERPTS FROM GREAT WRITERS

THE PRAYER OF THE PHYSICIAN

O God, I pray that I may have absolute intellectual honesty. Let others fumble, shuffle, and evade, but let me, the physician, cleave to the clean truth, assume no knowledge I have not and claim no skill I do not possess.

Cleanse me from all credulities all fatuous enthusiasms, all stubbornness, vanities, egotism, prejudices, and whatever else may clog the sound processes of my mind. These be dirt; make my personality as aseptic as my instruments.

Give me heart, but let my feeling be such as shall come over me as an investment of power, to make my thoughts clear and cold as start, and my hand skilful—strong as steel.

Deliver me from professionalism, so that I may be always human, and thus minister to sickly minds as well as to ailing bodies.

Give me a constant realisation of my responsibility. People believe in me. Into my hands they lay their lives. Let me, of all men, be sober and walk in the fear of eternal justice. Let no culpable ignorance of mine, no neglect nor love of ease, spoil the worth of my high calling.

Make my discretion strong as religion, that the necessary secrets of souls confided in me may be as if told to the priest.

Give me the joy of healing. I know how far short I am of being a good man; but make me a good doctor.

Give me that love and eagerness and pride in my work without which the practice of my profession will be fatal to me and to them under my care.

Give me a due and decent self-esteem, that I may regard no man's occupation higher than mine, envying not the king upon his throne so long as I am prime minister to the suffering.

Deliver me from playing at precedence, from the hankering for praise and prominence, from sensitiveness, and all like forms of toxic selfishness.

Give me money; not so little that I cannot have the leisure I need to put quality into service; not so much that I shall grow fat in head and leaden in heart, and sell my sense of ministry for the flesh-pots of indulgence.

Give me courage, but hold me back from over-confidence.

Let me so discharge the duties of my office that I shall not be ashamed to look any man or woman in the face, and that when at death I lay down my task I shall go to what judgment awaits me strong in the consciousness that I have done something toward alleviating the incurable tragedy of life.

Amen.

Balzac

Without being an advocate of suburban morality one can still respect the decencies. There is a middle ground; most of us live there.

We do not care for literature of the namby-pamby type: the Rollo books and Felicia Hemans may not be our notion of intellectual adventure; but still, just to be devilish, we do not wish to draggle along amidst the muds and stinks of this, our so manysided humanity.

When M. Zola goes through the house and, finding the garbage can and the soiled linen basket, exultingly holds them up to our gaze, crying, "Ah ha! At last the truth!" we have to admit, of course, that his discoveries are real, but so are the flowers on the library table; and ordinary, right-minded folk prefer looking at the flowers to looking at the garbage.

Memile Faguet has recently set forth an essay on Balzac. Although M. Faguet's point of view on things in general is usually antipodal to mine, I am glad he has said words about Balzac that I can quote with approval, as I would not dare say them on my own poor authority. Although he acknowledges Balzac's "vigor and good nature, his frankness, his generosity, and his genius for the creation of lifelike and powerful characters," yet he criticises him thus:

"He had not genius all the time. . . . A whole literature grew up out of Balzac's cesspools. . . . He is responsible for the easy-going and damnable audacity of all the novel writers who pretend to believe that realism lies in the study of sinister or shameful abnormality. . . . Ready-made romanticism and coarse realism are the two things which spoil Balzac's work, the former very much and the latter a little. What spoils nearly the whole of it is the vulgarity that was inherent in the man's nature and crept into nearly everything he did."

The desire to shock is not a trait of mastery. It is cheap. Most of us are startled by an outburst of profanity or obscenity, because we are not used to it. We order our lives to avoid such things.

Men swear because of their cultural limitation, their lack of vocabulary. The oath is the skyrocket of impotence.

And dirty, sordid, lusty and perverted books are written for much the same purpose—to attract attention to one who had not art nor personality enough to gain distinction in decent ways.

There may be excuses for exploiting the ugly and repugnant. As, for instance, when some beautiful sympathy or high impulse is to be thereby awakened. It is all right to view the beggar's sores if you are by that stimulated to heal the beggar. But the inspection of sores per se is not art.

Nothing is art that is not beauty. If out of horror you can draw nobleness, if out of wretchedness and despair you can extract heroism, and if out of the vile and repulsive aspects of human nature you can make the glory of the human spirit to shine, that is art.

But dirt for dirt's sake is plain vulgarity, for which there is no excuse.

WANT CONTROL OF ALIEN SHIP IMPORTATION

Tokio Drafts Plans In Concrete Form To Assist Shipowners

Tokio, June 10.—Keenly alive to the evils caused through the reckless importation of second-hand foreign steamers into Japan the Department of Communications has decided to adopt counter measures against further importation and plans in concrete form are being drafted by the authorities concerned. Sundry complaints made by the shipowners in general and the shipbuilders of this country against the importation to the Government during the past few months have finally prevailed upon the Government authorities to control the importation either by law or other means.

Although no definite plans are yet drafted, the Government authorities concerned are making a painstaking study of the problem, taking into consideration the interests of both shipowners and shipbuilders. Before announcing the regulations against the importation, the authorities concerned have pointed out the causes which led to the reckless importation of foreign ships into this country and had decided to correct these evils prior to the issuance of any prohibitory law.

One of the reasons why importation was made necessary was that the Japanese shipowners at large were depleted of funds with which to embark upon a large shipping business, though there are a few who are possessed of enormous funds obtained during the war boom, and the majority are in a sore financial plight, due to the prolonged business depression, and this fact caused them to satisfy themselves with old foreign ships bought at low prices.

EXCHANGE RATE IS CAUSE

The unusually disadvantageous exchange rate made it difficult for shipowners to place the shipping business on paying basis and this high money rate is not alleviated even at this time of business depression.

One fact that must not be lost lies in the plentiful supply of mariners in this country who can time at low wages and this caused be taken into employment at any at low wages and this caused shipowners to think it easy to operate ships imported from abroad at comparatively low expense.

The tendency among financiers, insurance firms and shippers to welcome foreign steamers must be taken into the reckoning in connection with the "rage" in foreign ship importation. Obtaining loans on the security of ships was difficult in this country before the world war but this barrier was broken down after the war and bankers were to lend money to shipowners on the security of cheap imported steamers. The difference of insurance charges between new and old steamers is very sight and on this account, shipowners in general prefer cheap imported ships to new ones.

Japanese shippers are generally indifferent to the choice of superior ships. They do not care for any kind of ship in particular but prefer satisfying shipment terms to superior ships. Under such circumstances, inferior freighters imported from abroad are satisfactory to shippers.

The Communications Department authorities once contemplated raising the customs duty on imported steamers as a measure for precluding further importation but the free duty system adopted by the Kwantung Government would induce shipowners to register these ships in the Kwantung leased territory and the authorities dropped this plan as worthless.

DOUBT SUCCESS OF MEASURES

Some influential shipowners are doubtful over the ability of the Government authorities to carry out a preventive measure against foreign ships and are reported to have advised the Government to draft the regulations on the following basis: To prohibit the importation of steamers of over 20 years of age after the prohibitory law operated in Norway: to establish an encouragement fund for scrapping old ships after the system in Italy; to fix the period allowed for the navigation of ships, excepting wooden ships and small ships and to adopt a method for giving the present shipowners a preferential right.

It is unknown whether the Government will accept the shipowners' advice in connection with the prohibitory law but the advices may be taken as a reference in the matter.

According to the Government investigation, the foreign ships imported into Japan since 1921 up to April, 1924, totaled 131 vessels with an aggregate of 757,984 tons, of which 23 vessels of 148,033 tons were imported during 1921; 23 vessels of 106,590 tons during 1922; 67 vessels of 398,007 tons during 1923; and 18 vessels of 105,354 tons up to April this year. The entire fleet of ships now registered in the Kwantung leased territory totals 111 vessels with an aggregate of 316,729 tons gross.

Ships under 1,000 tons gross number 33 vessels with an aggregate of 4,887 tons; ships of the 4,000 ton class, 14 vessels of 2,288 tons; ships of the 2,000 ton class, 6 vessels of 8,414 tons; ships of the 3,000 ton class, 12 vessels of 31,326 tons; ships of the 4,000 ton class, 14 vessels of 48,735 tons; ships of the 5,000 ton class, 21 vessels of 90,825 tons; ships of the 6,000 ton class, 15 vessels of 81,870 tons; ships of the 7,000 ton class, 4 vessels of 25,123 tons; ships of the 8,000 ton class, 2 vessels of 15,081 tons; ships of the 9,000 ton class, one ship of 9,220 tons.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY · GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

THE NEW ORIENTAL LIMITED

In Service Beginning June 1st

NOW 70 HOURS BETWEEN THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST & CHICAGO (without change) via GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

A solid steel flyer, shining, spic and span, brand new from the giant oil burning locomotive, a veritable greyhound of the rails, to the compartment observation car at the rear; a luxurious club on wheels with equipment pronounced by the Pullman Company the finest ever turned out by their vast shops.

It is in the important matter of travel comforts and little conveniences that the NEW ORIENTAL LIMITED will particularly excel, combining time-tested devices with newest innovations. Among the many luxurious travel features will be shower baths for men and for women; a barber shop with valet service; a comfortable smoking room for gentlemen; a commodious lounge room for ladies—a unique departure not found on any other train; a ladies' maid, manicure and hairdresser; a well-stocked buffet; 4 o'clock tea; magazines, newspapers, telegraphic news bulletins and stock reports; and a host of other incidentals contributing to the ease and comfort of travelers. Another departure from established precedent is the cheerful decorative scheme employed, utilizing various pleasing tints and colors in softly blended combination. There is nothing like this new train in existence.

The NEW ORIENTAL LIMITED will make its maiden trip June 1st, leaving Seattle at 8.00 p.m. for Spokane, Glacier National Park, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago (without change), where direct connections are made for all Eastern cities.

British Gunboat At Canton Fired Upon

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 11.—Despatches from Canton give an account of an incident which occurred recently on the East River, near Wuchow, when the British river gunboat "Robbin" was fired upon by some soldiers from the banks, and, returning the fire, inflicted a good many casualties.

It appears that the "Robin" had been sent up the river to bring down some British-owned launches which had been captured by pirates. Near Wuchow some soldiers opened fire from the banks and Commander Tudway, of the "Robin," was wounded in the thigh. The gunboat replied with a machine-gun fusillade which sent the soldiers scurrying into a handy clump of bamboos. Ranging accurately with the assistance of a nearby pagoda, the "Robin's" machine-gunners then swept through the bamboos, killing about 30 of the soldiers and wounding an equal number. The enemy's "artillery" consisted of an antiquated muzzle-loader, the missile from which bounced harmlessly off the gunboat's side.

When the affair was over, the "Robin" went on up the river and had no difficulty at all in collecting the launches and bringing them back.

Asks More Troops For General Chen

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 11.—According to information obtained in Chinese military circles General Tsai Cheng-hsun has telegraphed to Peking saying that General Chen Chiung-ming ought to be supported with additional troops, some being sent to General Chen and others to General Hung Chow-ling. General Tsai suggests sending these reinforcements from Kiangsi, and recommends as leaders of the reinforcements Generals Yao Wei-chun (Military Commissioner at Pinghsiang) and Feng Peng-jin (Military Commissioner in Southern Kiangsi). These two Generals and their men are ready to leave for Tayuling and Shaokuan, where they would await further instructions from Peking. General Tsai concludes by saying that he has already sent General Kwo Feng-kuei, his Chief of Scouts, to Nanhsung to make the necessary preparations there.

General Tsai has appealed to the Government several times for funds and this message is taken as an explanation of his special need for money. It is understood, however, that the earlier messages referred to the proposed expedition against Canton.

New Inspector For Szechuen Armies

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 11.—A mandate issued last night appoints General Liu Tsung-hou Inspecting Commissioner of the armies in Szechuen. The post is principally an honorary one and will not interfere with his duties as Tupan of the Szechuen-Shensi Frontier. General Liu reports that he has established his headquarters at Chungking and asks for an official seal.

As the result of Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan's request to withdraw the Hupei troops from Szechuen the arrangement has apparently been reached for the 3rd Mixed Brigade at Wanhsien, the 5th Brigade at Yungchuan and Lungcheng to be withdrawn, while the 5th Division under the command of General Lu Chin-shan will remain in Eastern Szechuen to protect traffic along the river, and the 18th Brigade will stay at Chungchow.

'Metal Mike' Guides President Ship

Pacific Mail Liner Equipped With New Steering Device

Day by day, in every way, the mechanical experts are taking the irk out of work and making life and travel easier and safer. One of the latest inventions which Shanghai skeptics may see for themselves on the return trip from the south of the President Lincoln, is an automatic steering device, known familiarly in shipping circles as "metal mike." vice, known familiarly in shipping circles as "metal make."

This new gyro-pilot, first tried out on the Atlantic some months ago, and on the Pacific just recently, will make it possible, undoubtedly, in the near future, for the skipper of a ship to sit back in his chair and steer the boat by pressing a button. For the present, however, "Metal Mike" is a sort of additional officer, an assistant quartermaster, playing a great part in stabilising the ship's course and making travel safer for passengers, while cutting down the running expenses of the ship for the company on the long straight stretches across the Pacific.

"Metal Mike" is a little fellow, a sort of sea-going Jeff, for he stands only four feet high. His open face displays the workings of his system, for on it are the compass points in all their graduations. When the Lincoln left San Francisco, "mike" made it possible for Captain Jones to turn the dial that is connected with the automaton's anatomy and set the ship's course straight across the ocean to the first stop in Honolulu.

There was no danger of "Metal Mike's" going ashore on a prohibition-defying bust in that tropical paradise. There was no danger of his succumbing to the lure of those lovely islands and quitting the Lincoln. "Metal Mike" although he is a sort of seaman, always stays right with the ship and doesn't ask for shore leave.

Briefly recounted, the mechanism of this new invention is simple. It acts as a stabiliser keeping the ship in a straight course and eliminating the "play" of the wheel caused by the pressure of water against the ship's bows. Everyone who has driven a motor car knows that where the road is rough and the resistance greater, it is harder to keep the car on the road than when a straight, smooth stretch of macadam spreads out ahead of one. So it is with a ship. On good days, when the sea is calm, the ship's quartermaster finds steering on the ocean road a comparatively easy matter. Even then, however, there is a slight zig-zag motion, not discernible perhaps, but comparable to the difference between a free-hand drawing of a straight line and a clear-cut drawing of the line with a ruler. "Metal Mike" by cutting out that ever-so-slightly jazzy motion has saved the Pacific Mail Steamship Company anywhere from five to ten barrels of oil a day on this trip out from San Francisco.

M. Edgar M. Wilson, general agent for the Pacific Mail in Shanghai, succeeding Mr. B. C. Haile who has just gone home on leave, was ship's companion of "Metal Mike" on the journey from Japan here and he is loud in his praises of the little automatic pilot.

'Metal Mike' is just another policy we have taken out in safety insurance for our passengers," said Mr. Wilson in explaining the gyro-pilot yesterday. "It simply means that we have an extra officer who is not subject to any human frailities but is on the alert constantly. Of course just now, when the ship approaches land, the gyro-pilot is removed, and the quartermaster takes the helm. This is not necessary, for 'Metal Mike' responds instantly to a turn of a dial, similar to the combination on a safe, to the veriest fraction of a degree. At the same time, we are out to insure our passengers' safety and instead of removing a quartermaster from our payrole we have added to his staff this mechanical contrivance which can do the same work.

"For those long miles of straight sea, though," continued Mr. Wilson, "we have found that the gyro-pilot was wonderfully efficient in eliminating all deviations from the ship's course."

The gyro-pilot, together with the gyroscope which is used on some ships to prevent rolling, is a long step forward in the increasing safety and comfort of ocean travel, which are already at what most people believe is the maximum. The invention of the gyro-pilot with all its potentialities opens up a vista of travel in the future on boats that are sent out from their ports by pressing a button and getting back the same way, reducing the personal equation to almost nothing.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company will take a party of shipping men down to the "President Lincoln," which is the first ship to make a trans-Pacific crossing with "Metal Mike," to inspect the little fellow and see what makes his wheels go 'round. The Lincoln will be in Shanghai about the 20th of the month.

Traveling School To Study Art

New York, May 10.—A summer school of art and history held in the great picture galleries, cathedrals and palaces of Europe is conducted by the Institute of International Education. Sailings have been booked on July 5 for the 1924 classes.

These art tours were inaugurated three years ago by the institute for the purpose of providing summer students with an opportunity to visit notable European centers without undergoing the delays and the discomforts of the ordinary traveler in a strange land. In association with Alliance Francaise, the Italy America Society, the English-speaking Union and the American Scandinavian Foundation, the institute has been able to provide special courtesies for its students from foreign Governments, universities, and industries.

Under the leadership of Professor Albert C. Phelps, of Cornell University, students of architecture will visit London, Cambridge, Leyden, Bruges, Ghent, Paris, Versailles, Avignon, Rome, Tivoli, Florence, Pisa, Venice, and a dozen other cities of similar interest. At each of these places, important buildings and decorative compositions will be studied and drawings and models by the Old World's greatest designers will be examined.

The class in painting will be under the leadership of John C. Tidden, of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. For those desiring it, outdoor classes in painting and sketching will be held at various points of interest. The travel route will be the same as for the classes in architecture.

Gardon lovers and lay travelers with a liking for decorative shrubs and unique flower combinations, will visit many English estates and Italian villas not ordinarily open to tourists. This is the first season that the course in landscape architecture has been a part of the art tours.

Peace In Palestine Straus' Aim

BY GERSHON AGRONSKY

Jerusalem, April 25.—Oscar S. Straus, three times United States Ambassador to Turkey, was among the most prominent Americans to visit Palestine during the present tourist season. Mr. Straus, who left Palestine yesterday, did not devote all his time to the regulation sight-seeing trips and was apparently in no great hurry to skip across the country in tourist fashion.

With Mrs. Straus, the former Ambassador spent two weeks at Government House on the Mount of Olives as the guest of the High Commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel. After that, he toured the country in leisurely fashion, visiting the principal towns—Hafita, Tiberias, and Safed—in addition to numerous Jewish villages and workers' settlements.

Mr. Straus managed to discharge one or two unofficial and self-imposed missions.

HIS TWO MISSIONS

The first mission he had set himself, as one familiar through long experience in these parts with political conditions in the Middle East was to help bring about a reconciliation within and between the various races and faiths. He tackled the Arab-Jewish problem by approaching leaders of the extreme Nationalist Arab wing and of the Zionists. He also had interviews with leading dignitaries of the Christian church, with a view to aiding in the settlement of some of the outstanding disputes.

It is difficult to say to what extent Mr. Straus succeeded in ironing out centuries old controversies. He did succeed in disabusing the minds of those of the Moslem leaders who were inclined to believe that America might intervene in Middle East affairs. This belief was encouraged by the Crane Commission sent out by the late President Wilson during the Peace Conference and seems to have become embedded in the ideology of the extremist Arab spokesmen.

PLEGES FAIR DEAL

No less a person than King Hussein of the Hedjaz, the recently selfproclaimed Caliph, told Mr. Straus he would be willing to have America station two warships in the Mediterranean in the event of Palestine and Syria, the territories now administered by Great Britain and France, passing under Arab control, as a guarantee that his pledges for a fair deal for all races and creeds would be kept inviolate.

Mr. Straus had also set himself the task of examining the political situation under the British mandate and the economic progress made under the Balfour declaration providing for the erection of the Jewish National Home. After a visit to the centres of Jewish colonization Mr. Straus seemed very much impressed with the evidence of progress on all sides. This agricultural colonization is being promoted by the Zionist Organization.

SURE OF SUCCESS

"A colonization that has behind it so intense a feeling, personal sacrifice and devotion cannot fail to achieve ultimate success," Mr. Straus said in

THE WONK

By Gerve Baronti

Only a pariah puppy
That tugs at my trouser legs;
Asking for any attention
In the way that a puppy begs.

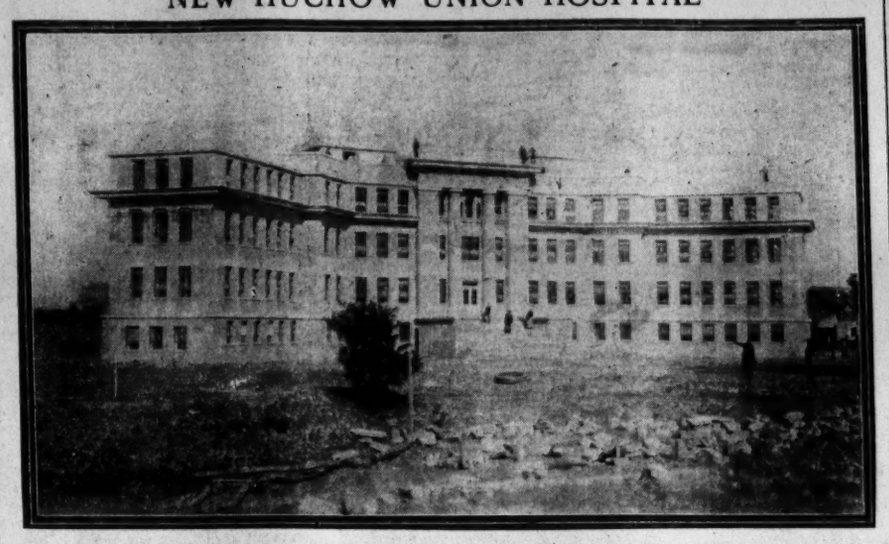
Only a bit of yellow fluff
In a world packed full of strife;
Nosing for scraps in the gutter
By which to maintain his life.

Only a bunch of tangled hair
That's seeking with merry eyes
For any new sort of mischief
That a puppy can devise.

Only a little playful mite
With a tiny stump of tail;
Happy because he does not care
If his kind's beyond the pale.

Only two little pounds of joy
That nods in a knowing way
As the leashed, led by haughty servants,
Walk out in the cool of day.

NEW HUCHOW UNION HOSPITAL



The above photograph shows the main building of the new Huchow Union Hospital, which was formally opened on June 3 at Huchow, Kiangsu.

Until this building was occupied, the extensive medical work of the city and district was carried on by a union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South and the Baptist Church in a Chinese building rented for the purpose.

The new buildings, now completed or in process of construction, are the main hospital, as pictured above, the outpatient building, a large two-story building near the main street, a foreign doctors' residence, Chinese doctors' residences, servants quarters, and a power house, in which are installed machinery for electric lighting and power for X-Ray equipment, a gas plant, pumping machinery, water filters, etc.

The building was constructed without a general contractor. Dr. F. P. Manget, assisted by Mr. Chang of the hospital staff and a supervisor, did practically the entire work of a contractor. Plans for the buildings were prepared by the Methodist Episcopal Church South Architectural Bureau, Mr. J. H. Black architect. This building is considered one of the best layouts for hospitals in this part of China and embodies several unique features chief of which is a spiral ramp for easy communication between floors in place of the elevators. The building is planned for steam heat, hot and cold water systems, modern plumbing, high pressure steam system for laundry, sterilising clothing and instruments, cooking, and emergency heating of operating rooms. Gas piping is placed throughout the building and all private rooms are wired for heating with electric radiators.

Since the building was opened all the private rooms have been occupied and some rooms intended for other use have been converted into rooms for patients. The hospital has about 80 beds for patients in use at the present time.

Dr. Manget with family is now on his way to America to raise funds for additional buildings and equipment for the completion of the hospital. When completed the hospital will offer to patients every care and treatment afforded by the average hospital in America.

Mo-ti And His Dream Of Peace

The Story Of An Idealist In Ancient China

By David Owen In The Nation

In the kingdom of Sung during the declining days of the Chou dynasty some 450 years before Christ the philosopher Mo-ti lived and taught. But his doctrine did not flourish, and to posterity he was to become merely an obscure heretic. His formula of mutual good-will and human solidarity was thought subversive to the divinely ordained scheme of things in the Middle Kingdom, to the venerable virtue of filial piety, to the sanctity of the five-fold relationships, and the meticulous practice of personal morality. The obscurity which has been the lot of Mo may have been due to the almost undecipherable state of the Chinese texts, the result, perhaps, of "the burning of the books" in 213 B.C. under the great Tsin emperor. But the more active cause was the doctrinaire Mencius, who arose as the defender of the faith delivered once for all to the saints of China. "If the doctrines of Mo are not suppressed and those of Confucius set forth," said the old dogmatist, "then those perverse speakings will delude the people and stop up the path of benevolence and righteousness." That Mencius accomplished his task thoroughly not even his bitterest critics can deny. In the words of an ancient Confucian writer, "Mo was blocking up the way of truth, when Mencius refuted him and scattered his delusions without difficulty."

The key to the philosophy of Mo-ti is to be found in the single expression "universal good-will." To lack of that quality he attributed all of the evils of the time—a catalogue of evils devastatingly contemporary:

"What are the conditions really harmful to a country? There are many: aggressions of powerful states against small; oppression of the poor by the wealthy, of the weak by the strong, of minorities by majorities; contempt of the great for the humble; lack of good-will on the part of governments; and the corruption of ministers."

"PEACE ON EARTH"

But if the way of love were actually practiced—

"Princes bearing good-will toward their fellows would fight no more battles; heads of families, loving others, would not bear grudges against them; men would love their neighbors and would neither steal nor do harm to them; officials and ministers would be benevolent and loyal; fathers and sons with love between them would be governed by a filial spirit; brothers, loving each other, would find themselves in harmony and would be easily reconciled if there were a quarrel. Then, when there is good-will among men, the strong will not harm the weak; majorities will not oppress minorities; the rich will not be arrogant toward the poor; the noble-born will not be contemptuous toward the man of humble birth; and the charlatan will not dupe the simple-minded. . . . . Misery, injustice, jealousies, and hatred may be kept from society by the practice of universal good-will.

"When a man practices good-will toward others they respond by loving him; when a man helps others, they aid him; when a man does wrong to others, they do wrong to him; when a man hates others they reciprocate by hating him."

THE IDEAL CITIZEN

The citizen of the ideal society is described in words strikingly similar to another ancient picture of the man of good-will:

"He who accepts the principle of universal love. . . . when he sees his fellow-man hungry he will feed him; cold, he will clothe him; sick, he will nurse him; dead, he will bury him."

Nor must the spirit of mutual helpfulness be confined by class lines:

"Chen-tu-ti said to Chou Kong: 'Why should we look down upon men of a lower class? Pearls come from muddy water, but every prince prizes them. Let us change our opinions.'"

The old philosopher delighted to hurl rather kindly dialectic at the respectable prejudices and pious fears of his contemporaries. It must have been distressing to the bureaucrats to hear him observe that a "king is only a name" or that "when the people speak, the truth will be known." Though by no means an absolutist in his attitude toward war, he was not easily convinced by official fictions of wars to carry out the decree of Heaven—the idealistic guise in which even then aggression was made to appear.

THEFT AND WAR

His was the disturbing faculty naively but trenchantly of reducing war to its lowest terms:

"If a man goes into his neighbor's garden and steals peaches and plums, public opinion condemns him and the magistrate punishes him. Why? Because he has done wrong to his neighbor. One who steals a dog, a pig, or chickens trespasses more seriously against justice. . . . His anti-social qualities are more evident and his crime more deserving of punishment. And likewise, the offense of him who steals a horse or a beef is more grave than that of him who steals a dog. . . . All of these thieves are condemned by public opinion.

"But when one prince attacks another's kingdom, none blames him. He is praised and people call it human nature. When one man kills another, public opinion says, "It is a crime and the murderer deserves death." If this be true then one who kills ten men deserves death ten times over. So with one who kills ten thousand men. . . But those who commit the greatest of crimes against justice by making war we praise, considering their acts honorable. We write maxims to commend their exploits to posterity.

"Here are men who, seeing a little black call if black, but seeing a great deal of black call it white. I say that such men do not know how to distinguish black from white."

THE KING OF LOU

The king of Lou was making preparations to attack the kingdom of Chen. Mo-ti went immediately to the monarch to protest against the outrage. The following conversation is reported by the disciples of the philosopher:

"The philosopher Mo said: Let us suppose that in your kingdom the big cities attacked the small and that powerful families made war on weaker, what would you say?"

"Lou-iang-ouen answered: 'In the kingdom of Lou all are my subjects. If the strong oppress the weak, I shall punish them."

"Mo-ti replied: 'Heaven is master of the whole universe as you are master of your kingdom. If you attack the people of Chen, will not Heaven punish you?"

"Lou-lang-ouen said: 'Why do you want to dissuade me from this war? In invading the kingdom of Chen I am carrying out the decree of Heaven [sic] because for the last three genrations the people have been guilty of unspeakable crimes. . . . I am aiding Heaven by punishing them."

Mo-ti responded: 'Imagine that a father having a bad boy punishes him and that every father in the neighborhood, providing himself with a stick, begins to beat the boy, saying, 'By punishing this boy I am carrying out the wishes of his father.'"

"That would be absurd."

"But that is just what you are preparing to do."

NOT PRACTICAL, CLAIM

Mo-ti encountered the obstacles immemorially met by idealists. He was told that his way was not practical, that it was contrary to human nature.

"Those who teach in the kingdom say: 'It is true that if this

Reichstag Will Favor Expert Plan

BY MAXIMILIAN HARDEN

Germany's Leading Publicist

Berlin, May 10.—The German Republic, proclaimed Nov. 9, 1918, has lost the great majority of its supporters. This was the real significance of last Sunday's elections.

A quarter of those eligible to vote did not use the privilege, thus demonstrating their indifference to the republic's fate. And of those who voted for the parties which profess republican principles, how many really desire maintenance of the republic and are willing to fight for it? Certainly not many. The majority, in the proletarian as in the bourgeois parties, is anti-republican.

The Communists—who, with sixty-two Deputies, will make much stupid noise, but will not be dangerous to the State's safety—the Communists and the Socialists would like to clothe the republic in the bright red of proletarian politics. The Nationalists would like to decorate it with the regalia of the Kaiser. Neither party wants it to remain as it was yesterday.

Germany's Parliamentary situation is by no means as confused as the country is asked to believe. Discontent with the republic's accomplishments has driven the voters to the extreme parties, both of the Right and Left. That's all.

The new Reichstag will not reject the experts' plan unless the new Government proves more stupid, even, than its predecessor. If former Chancellor Stresemann's personal ambitions are satisfied, his People's Party doubtless will coalesce with the Nationalists. This will make possible a purely bourgeois government with the two-thirds majority required for amending Constitution.

That is what the people desire, as was indicated by the votes, and it would force the Nationalists to show what they can do besides make wild gestures and utter violent words. They could excuse acceptance of the experts' report by saying the Marx Government did it. In exchange, they could put the Nationalists in Government jobs, replacing the present Socialist incumbents. Perhaps they would regard a republic managed by themselves more favorably.

The humor of the situation is that even the extreme Nationalists will have to take international opinion into account. For the Powers from whom loans and evacuation of occupied territories are asked can decide to which Germany these favors are to be granted, and to which refused.

Old Peking Monastery Being Rebuilt

Workers Restore Ancient Monument Which Antedates Khans

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Peking, June 11.—Peking's oldest monument, a magnificent structure that reared itself high over the ancient cities in whose dust the Peking of today has existed the years from when it was "a Tartar encampment in stone, a fortified garrison of nomad bannermen surrounding the palace of the Great Khan," down through the gorgeous pageants of medevial emperors, and the chaos and confusion that came with the too soon born Republic, is being repaired.

On the lower level of the unique structure—which was old when modern Peking was still a civic babe in arms, a force of workmen are mixing mortar, piling bricks, and arranging stones with which to patch up the weather and time-beaten ramparts of the ancient thing and keep it from crumbling into the dust from whence it came centuries ago. Yesterday, when the old pile of masonry, once the glory of the city, was visited by a twosome of sightseers interested in its hoary age and traditions they were met by the strange sight of fresh material about to be used in repairing an edifice so ancient it is about to crumble beneath the weight of its own years.

High above the turbulent cities of the past and memories of picturesque rulers who have come and gone in bygone days the White Dagoba of the Monastery has seen Peking in all its phases, in all its changing moods, in ruins and in splendor, and now it is to be given a new lease on life so that it may go down through the ages yet to come as a survival of the glories of Kitai at the time Ser Marco Polo was singing of its magnificence for people across the sea who had no idea of the magnificence that bloomed beyond the sunset.

BUILT BEFORE 1100

The Monastery of The White Dagoba (Pai-t'a-ssu) was built sometime between 1084 and 1100—just about the time the Normans were conquering England and the Crusaders were beginning their epochal march to wrest the Holy Land from the hands of the infidels. It was wrought, legends of old China say, as a memorial to Buddha and has buried in its great hulk 20 beads that were once thumbed by the Buddha himself, 2,000 ornate clay pagodas, and five Books of Charm.

The dagoba was built after the architectural style of Mongolian reliquaries, symbolizing in its five sections—base, body, spire, ornament and gilded ball—the five elements of Chinese lore, and from a vista in the distance looks like a great liquer bottle crowned with an umbrella around its neck. Once one of the most famous temples in all China surrounded the great dagoba and it boasted the most famous figure of Buddha in the land, but now the temple has fallen into ruins beyond repair, the courtyard that once resounded to the tread of thousands of pilgrim's feet echoes only to the clatter of a few stray foreign tourists, and the once magnificent gates are surrounded by a motley collection of shops and stalls that sell everything from hot water to imitation tortoise shell cigarette boxes, made in Japan.

Chinese historians of the semi-mythical ages make brief mention of a town that was called Chi which was located on about the same site as the Peking of today with its modern buildings and tracks laid for tramways. The city called Chi was in its glory when the Greeks and their famous Wooden Horse of nursery story days were besieging Troy, as the capital of the Principality of Yen, one of the seven important fiefs of ancient and feudal China.

DESTRUCTION OF CHI

After a few fleeting centuries of importance the Emperor Huang Ti captured Chi and destroyed it about the same time he ordered the Burning of the Books—about 221 B. C.—and no monument of his reign remains. Then came the Han Emperors (208 B. C.-A. D. 220), the first rulers actually to put young China on its feet as an up-and-coming country. The Hans built a city called Yen, south of Chi, where the White Dagoba stands, but all their buildings have long since crumbled into dust and all that remains of their glory are the Han bronzes, the most antique of China's relics in art.

Then came several dynasties of little importance when looked back upon today, except the T'angs, who built a city called Yu Chou which rode along through the years until the Khitan Tartars swept down from the steppes in A. D. 1915, destroyed Yu Chou, and built a new and larger city which they called Nanking, or Southern capital, to distinguish it from their Manchurian capital in the North.

It was in this ancient Nanking, whose namesake now graces the Yangtsze above Shanghai, that the famous White Dagoba was built to looked down upon a city with a circumference of 12 miles within walls 30 feet high mounted with eight great gates. From the beginning the White Dagoba and the Monastery established on it became one of the ancient city's most noted places, a sight

Old Drivers Are Asked To Set Example

New York, May 1.—With sales of new motor cars running upward at a record-breaking rate throughout the country, the American Automobile Association will ask all experienced drivers to set a good example to the newcomer at this time, when it appears that traffic safety is the more important than motor recessity, it was announced in a bulletin just issued from A.A.A. headquarters in this city.

Thomas P. Henry, president of the A.A.A., declares that there was never a better opportunity to put every experienced driver's complaint against recklessness to the acid test. He points out that the new driver is naturally imitative and that if the people who have had experience with driving will set a decent example considerable progress will be made in the work of safeguarding the highways.

This is in line with the A.A.A.'s policy of solving the safety problem by natural means.

"The average driver is always complaining because the newcomer does senseless things when at the wheel, but seldom realizes that he is often leading the newcomer into being his own stumbling block," Mr. Henry says. "Unless the seasoned drivers take particular care to see that they do the right thing at the right time, the unskilled driver will not know when he is taking chances.

"Every newcomer at the wheel of an automobile sets out to do as the Romans do, and if the Romans continue to take chances we shall have the usual number of grade-crossing catastrophes and the many other inexcusable accidents and fatalities incident to careless motoring.

HAS UNIQUE ROLE

"The experienced driver has a unique role to play this spring, if he earnestly desires to see conditions improved. He must recognise, first of all, that the newcomer represents a hazard to him, and that it is always to his advantage to keep away from the beginner. The beginner does not know enough to keep out of the experienced driver's way. So there is only one answer.

"The experienced driver can do a real service to the country by giving the newcomer every possible advantage, even if it means sacrificing rights and being inconvenienced. Safety is worth everything.

"It is often the experienced driver who leads the newcomer astray by making conditions more complicated than they should be. Every one is a beginner some time, and the experienced motorist should bear in mind that the more assistance he gives to the newcomer, the sooner the latter will cease being a menace.

NEW DRIVERS IMPRESSED

"If the seasoned motorist will do everything in his power to keep his driving above reproach, it is a foregone conclusion that the new drivers will be impressed with their shortcoming and therefore make every attempt to make the grade.

"A lot of beginners have come to think that it's quite right to cut corners, speed in the city, pass standing street cars and fail to horn at crossing just because they see that people more experienced are doing these very things. It is a dirct cause of automobile and pedestrian accidents, and evidence a plenty that safety education of the practical sort must be initiated by those who are naturally regarded as examples."

Franklin Workers Are Given Prizes

Cash prizes aggregating $3,932 were distributed to 254 employes of the Franklin Automobile Company in connection with the termination of the fifth Franklin Suggestion Contest conducted by the Franklin Company for its workers.

Prizes were awarded at a testimonial banquet given to prize winners, officials of the company and heads of departments taking part in the ceremony. The prizes ranged from $400 downwards. The suggestion system, inaugurated at the Franklin plant on March 21, 1921, has been thoroughly successful and many hundreds of valuable ideas have been advanced by the employes tending either to improve the quality of the Franklin car or to cut down the cost of production without impairing quality.

One group of prizes was set aside for hourly workers, another group for foremen and assistant foremen and a third group for salaried employes other than heads of departments, this arrangement precluding the possibility of foremen competing against workmen. Since the introduction of the system, a total of $20,159 has been distributed among the employes.

Explains Benefits Of Balloon Tires

Greater Riding Comfort And Safety Are Afforded, Claim

The popular impression established with the public that balloon tires are new—or an innovation—was largely dispersed a few days ago in an interview with C. A. Penfield, sales manager of the Nash Motor Company.

Speaking of the actual time that balloon, or a tire somewhat similar to the balloon, has been before the public, Penfield said: "The first step in the development of the present balloon tire was made back in 1916 when a tire known as the Jumbo, size 30 x 3½ was brought out. This tire was 19 per cent oversize at the time, of very thin construction, and especially large air chamber—features which are largely magnified in the balloon tire of today.

"The next step forward was in 1919 when a cord tire of 30 x 3½, carrying an air pressure of only 30 pounds, was brought out. Now in 1924 the new balloon tire simply carries out, and emphasises to an extreme degree the low air pressure advantages that are being demonstrated today.

"Greater riding comfort, safety and car protection without sacrificing mileage or increasing fuel consumption is found by owners of Nash cars carrying balloon equipment. A combination of the well-known resiliency of the Nash body springs and the low pressure tire makes a well-nigh perfect combination. Not only is greater comfort obtained, but also greater safety and control of the car; and skidding is virtually eliminated for, even on wet streets, these tires cling to the pavement because of increased flexibility and a larger traction contact. In mud or sand, these large, powerful tires prevent the car from sinking and hold it on a straight and true course without slip or slide. The huge air chambers with greatly lowered air pressure absorb all road irregularities, jars and jolts, and therefore they never reach the body. Vibration, squeaks and rattles, which are especially annoying in a well-used closed car, are entirely eliminated."

Jordan Got His Start As An Advertising Man

In a most interesting article appearing in the April number of Forbes Magazine, O. D. Foster writes interestingly and intelligently of the life and accomplishments of Edward S. Jordan, automobile manufacturer and unofficially known throughout American automobile circles as the "Voice" of the automotive industry.

"Interesting to a degree is the personality of the man who has brought new life into the dull dignity of automobile advertising copy," writes Foster. "Racing side by side with Jordan's keen merchandising sense is his vivid love of the open, his vigorous interest in play, his keen knowledge the call of the primitive has for the human, his quick analytical sense of values, and back of it all is the impelling urge generated by his love of adventure, that spirit which keeps him on the road continually traveling from place to place."

The article deals interestingly with the struggles of Jordan as a high school boy, as a college lad working his way through by means of newspaper and magazine writing and later entering the advertising field as manager of the advertising and supervisor for the sales of the Thomas P. Jeffrey Company, manufacturer of the Jeffrey motor car. This happened back in 1907.

The article continues: "For ten years young Jordan developed without restriction his brilliant originality. With dynamic energy he wrote advertising copy, booklets, feature articles for papers and at the same time supervised sales. His energy was tireless, his optimism apparently inexhaustible, and his sheer joy in every kind of work passed itself on to his associates. He was a continual stimulant to everyone around him."

With the experience gained during this period of time, Jordan launched into business for himself early in 1916, being backed financially by the friends that he had made during the ten previous years.

Actual production of the Jordan automobile was begun within six months after the first meeting of the directorate of the company in Chicago, Cleveland having been selected as the site of the new Jordan factory.

The first years output was consigned to forty dealers or distributors, each of whom had agreed to take and merchandise fifty cars.

"Today, after eight years of operation, the company produces cars at the rate of 10,000 a year and it has a dealer organisation that might well be envied by companies of twice its age.

"What of the future of the automobile industry," I asked the wizard of people's thoughts and desires.

"The public wants a distinctive car, good looking, comfortable and light of weight for economical operation," said Jordan. "People get tired of living in houses that look just like everybody else's and they feel the same way about cars. Analysis of the sale of cars determines first of all that the natural inclination of the public is first to buy a low-priced car and then a better one. For this reason the dealer who does not supplement his low-priced line of cars with a better car is losing a big share of potential profits, for having already built up a clientele, he should be able to cash in on his early contracts by supplementing his first sales with a higher grade car."

European Factories In Good Shape

Paris, April 11.—Improved conditions are reflected in the majority of the balance sheets of Continental European automobile companies published during the last few weeks. Peugeot, for the first time since 1918, will pay a dividend of 25 francs per share on the year's working, the net profit for the twelve months being 5,269,823 francs, compared with only 523,971 for the preceding twelve months.

Fiat, at Turin, shows a profit of 22,541,717 liras for the year 1923, and will pay a dividend of 20 liras per share. Pirelli, the leading Italian tire firm, has a credit balance of 12,086,308 liras on last year's working and will pay a dividend of 45 liras per 500 liras share.

S. T. D. Motors, comprising Talbot-Darracq in France, Sunbeam and Talbot in England, show a profit of £102,178 for the year and will pay a dividend of 8½ percent on the preferred ordinary shares. The French Talbot-Darracq and the Sunbeam have been the two most profitable units of this group.

Rochet-Schneider shows a profit of 1,771,506 francs on the year and will pay a dividend of 12 francs per 50 francs share. The Autoplace Taxicab Co. the biggest of its kind in Paris, with 3,100 cabs in service, earned 6,097,224 francs in 1123 compared with 3,721,027 francs the preceding year. The Gabriel Voisin Automobile Co., increased its turnover by 18,000,000 francs and showed a net profit of 1,826,475 francs for the year.

The Saurer Track Co. had a loss of nearly 220,000,000 francs on the year's working. The Guome and Rhone Aviation Engine Co. showed a hsavy loss on the year's balance sheet.

New Device To Check Auto Thieves

The newest guardian against the motor vandal in the United States consists of a conspicuous white enamel frame to enclose each license plate, a red canceling cross to be dropped across the numbers, and an independent ignition connection that locks the motor.

Upon parking a car that is equipped with this device, a short turn of a lever situated on the floor board near the seat automatically locks the motor, and in addition drops and locks the steel canceling crosses through both front and rear license numbers. No key is necessary to lock the car, but the owner's key, in one operation, automatically unlocks the ignition system and removes the canceling crosses from the license plates. There are no springs or electric wires, the device being purely a mechanical one.

Earnings Of General Motors

Detroit, Mich., April 26.—Publication of the quarterly statement of the earnings of the General Motors Corporation has been decided upon by the board of directors as the future policy of the corporation, according to the announcement of Alfred P. Sloan Jr., president.

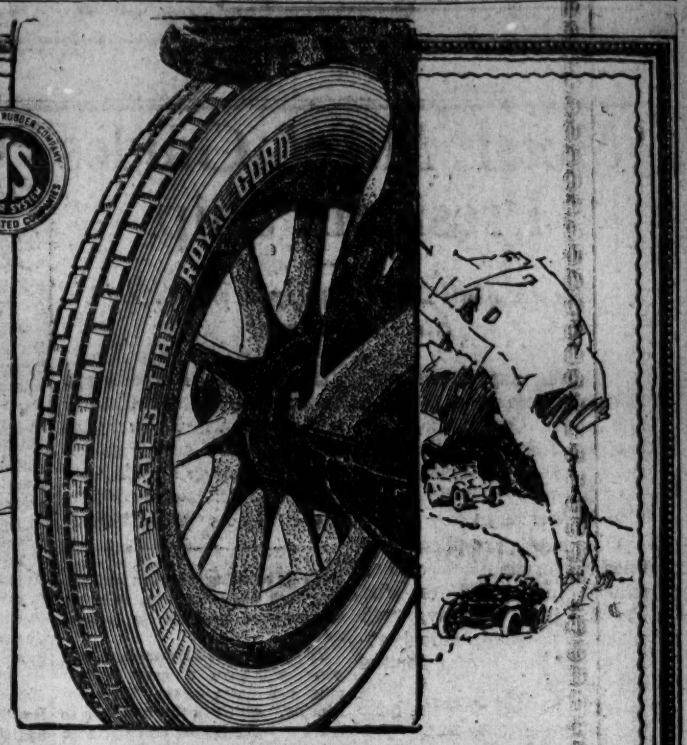
"The final figures for the first quarter of this year will not be available for several days," said Sloan, "but preliminary figures indicate that net earnings available for dividends, after reserves for depreciation and taxes, are $19,280,000, which compares with $19,406,000 in corresponding period a year ago. After deducting $1,731,000, covering dividends of preferred and debenture stocks, there remains a balance of $17,459,000 available for common stock dividends. This is equivalent to 85 cents on the common stock for the first quarter, or at the rate of $3.40 per year, but does not include the General Motors proportion of Fisher Body Company in excess of dividends paid.

"In the first quarter there was sold 212,572 cars and trucks, as compared with 176,258 for the first quarter of 1923.

"Consumer demand in the spring of 1923 exceeded all previous records and this year is equal to and probably 10 percent greater than last year. Due to unseasonable weather, what is termed 'spring buying' is just getting well under way.

"We lost business last year by not having sufficient cars in the field. To avoid repetition of this condition the corporation changed its policy and ran its plant at peak during the past winter and spring in order that dealers and distributors should have a good supply of finished cars to meet the spring demand.

"This having been accomplished, the plants of the corporation are now operating at a rate equivalent to over 80 percent of the sales of the first quarter. It will be noted that this policy of running the plants at peak through the winter and spring enables the corporation to supply dealers and distributors with sufficient cars to meet spring requirements and slack off its operations during the summer months to that point necessary to cover the lesser demand for automobiles during that period of the year."



Low tire cost doesn't mean buying the cheapest tire you can find. It means buying the tire that carries your motor car furthest at the least cost per mile.

California Checks Up Auto Traffic

San Francisco, May 3.—In order that comparative studies may be made of traffic increases during the last two years, engineers of the California Highway Commission are anxiously awaiting compilation of the results of the traffic census taken throughout the State highway system by the maintenance forces, April 13 and 14. Reports from the divisions are expected to reach headquarters within the next ten days or two weeks.

Two years ago an extensive traffic count was made by the commission in co-operation with the United States Bureau of Public Roads and twenty-four California counties. At 103 stations throughout the State, in 1922, the count indicated an increase in the volume of traffic of 47.4 percent over 1920.

The 1924 count was made at some 300 stations and the engineers are wondering if the last two years will show the remarkable jump in traffic recorded from 1920 to 1922. The increase in automobile registration during that period was 45.1 percent. Between 1922 and 1924 it has not been as great.

INTERESTING FACTS

Many interesting facts about motor traffic in California were revealed by the 1922 count. It showed old Dobbin almost eliminated from the highways. On the State system horse drawn vehicles were but 1.2 percent of the total traffic, a drop from 2.3 percent the 1920 figure. A count on country roads showed 97.7 percent of the traffic to be motor vehicles.

The data presented represents traffic between 6 o'clock in the morning and 10 o'clock at night. Check counts for the entire twenty-four hours show that this traffic is 92 percent of the total.

The 1922 count was extended to a number of country roads throughout the State and the results indicate that 74 percent of the State's traffic, in vehicle miles, is on the improved sections of the State highway system and only about 26 percent on country highways.

WEEK END TRAFFIC

Californians use their automobiles the year around. This was revealed by the fact that winter traffic in 1922 was shown to be 77 percent of the summer count. The sum of Saturday and Sunday traffic was about equal to that of the remaining five days of the week, when it was fairly constant.

While the total number of trucks increased from 1920 to 1922 truck traffic dropped from 12.5 percent of the total in 1920 to 11.3 percent in 1922, indicating a remarkable increase in pleasure car traffic throughout the State.

Considerable increases also were noted in the number of passenger busses and commercial truck lines, especially in the vicinity of the larger centers of population.

TRUCK OVERLOADS

A considerable number of trucks were stopped and weighed in 1922 and the results showed 11.7 percent of all trucks overloaded beyond the legal weight on tires. Seventy-nine percent were overloaded on rear wheels alone, 6.5 percent were overloaded on the front wheels and 14.5 percent on both front and rear wheels.

It was estimated that 60 percent of the rear wheel overloads were avoidable.

The census begun by the maintenance department of the Highway Commission several weeks ago will be continued indefinitely for two days a month, eventually covering all days of the week and seasons of the year. The results should provide the most accurate check yet made of traffic on the California highway system.

State Highway Engineer R. M. Morton, commenting on the value of the census, declared "highway discussions are rapidly shaping themselves around traffic census figures. The ideas to be gleaned from traffic data will go a long way toward governing the expenditure of funds in the future, especially as regards maintenance of the highways."

Device Tells When Oil Must Be Changed

Improper lubrication often results because motorists are unable to tell when the oil in the crankcase should be changed. The Gordon oil tester is an ingenious device which shows quickly, without any analysis or test, whether the oil is fit for further use or should be changed. Two parallel glass tubes are provided. The shorter one is sealed and contains what is known as the master oil, an oil known to be suited to the engine. The longer tube marked "A" is filled with a sample of the oil to be tested and the end is then sealed with a cork. Space is left in each tube for an air bubble. When the tester is inverted the air bubbles rise in the two tubes. If the bubble in the tube "B" reaches the top of its tube before the bubble in the master oil reaches the top of its tube, then the danger point has been reached and the oil should be changed. The poorer the quality of the used oil, the more rapid the rise of the bubble; the better the condition of the used oil, the slower the rise of the bubble.

Common Steering Trouble

The commonest steering fault is stiffness, resulting from tires that are too soft or from lack of lubrication of the steering knuckles.

It is not necessary to have the tires pumped up to an uncomfortable hardness, but they should be kept reasonably near proper pressure. If the tires are already at pressure, the steering knuckles will be the next location to examine for the cause of the trouble. The steering knuckles consist of a knuckle bolt, on which the front wheels swivel and the weight of the entire front of the car rests on two bearings, usually located at the top of the knuckle. Obviously bearing a load such as this, these bearings require careful lubrication. Give it to them if you wish easy steering and safety. Incidentally, if grease lubricant is used, remember that special greases for lubricating small parts are available and should be used. Poor grease will squeeze out and dry up under the heavy pressure existing at the knuckles.

Hard steering is sometimes caused by faults in the gear assembly at the end of the steering column. After considrable service the gears at this location develop wear and excessive play, which results in poor steering. Keep the gear housing at the end of the steering column filled with grease, once a season is usually enough. On some cars there is a fairly long bearing on the shaft that carries the steering arm. In some cases this gets lubrication from the main housing, but in others there is a lubricator for the bearing, which is apt to be placed in a position not readily discovered. If your car has this bearing lubricator, be sure that it gets its proper lubricant.

A not frequent cause of bad steering is found in breakage of the spring center bolt, which allows the axle to work back along the spring. Obviously when this occurs on one side and not on the other, the car has a longer wheelbase on the broken side. This gives the car a constant tendency to sheer off toward the shorter side. A quarter of an inch difference will produce this effect.

A similar tendency is caused by front wheels that are not properly aligned. A heavy bump of any kind, even a jam against the curb may cause misalignment of the front wheels. In case this happens the best way to handle the matter is to have the repair-shop align the wheels, as it will have special equipment intended specifically for the service.

Ford Evolves New Type Of Motor Truck

The Ford Motor Company have recently added another unit to their line of products, an all-steel combination truck body and cab mounted on the standard Ford one ton chassis to be sold as a complete unit.

The new body is of the open express type, so constructed that it may be readily converted into other body combinations by using stakes, side boards, canopy top, screen sides, etc.

"In fact," says the Ford statement, "the purpose in producing the new body was to place a low cost general utility truck, meeting both agricultural and commercial requirements, at the disposal of ton truck users."

The body is built of steel to withstand the most severe usage and presents a new development in construction. The steel sills are reinforced with wood in order to lessen vibration and road shocks, thus making for more durability and longer life.

The loading space is seven feet two inches in length by four feet in width and of convenient and practical depth. The end gate is strongly braced and secured by heavy chains which hold it in position when lowered.

The cab, also of steel construction, is extra roomy. The seat is of artificial leather, well-cushioned on four inch springs. Protection from the weather is afforded by close fitting door curtains rounded on uprights and opening and closing with the door. An oblong window in the back of the cab gives ample facilities for rear vision, adding to the safety as well as the convenience of the driver.

More Deaths, Fewer Births In America

The death rate of the United States continues to increase, while the birth rate continues to decline.

Statistics compiled by the Census Bureau show the annual death rate to have been 12.6 per 1,000 of population in the first nine months of 1923, compared with 11.8 for the same period of 1922. The annual birth rate was 22.8 per 1,000, compared with 23.1.

Montana had the lowest death rate, with 7 per 1,000 population, and Vermont had the highest rate, with 15.8. North Carolina had the highest birth rate, with 30.2 per 1,000; Montana had the lowest, with 17.5.

Peace In Palestine Straus' Aim

speaking of the old and new colonists he had seen at work. "They are bound to triumph over the many obstacles which, under other circumstances, it would be impossible to achieve. There is a spirit of cheerfulness and happiness beaming in the faces of the men and women who are building up the colonies; unlike the hosts that Moses led they do not seem to hanker after the fleshpots of Egypt.

"If the Christian world knew and appreciated what a reconstructed and prospering Palestine means for the cause of securing Christian harmony and brotherly love in the Holy City and throughout Palestine, where discord has continued for centuries, they would be among the most ardent Zionists, and would join hands with the Jews in promoting good will among all religious communities as well as in aiding the economic reconstruction of the country."

AVOWAL OF PEACE

It is understood that before leaving America Mr. Straus was asked by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ to study the possibility of bringing concord and amity instead of discord and enmity in the land sacred to the world's three greatest faiths. In furtherance of his effort to promote religious concord, he had a conference here with the Greek Patriarch Damianos, the most influential Christian dignitary in this part of the world. He obtained from him a signed statement wherein the Greek Patriarch avowed his intention of living "in peace and Christian love with all Christian and non-Christian communities in Palestine."

He also had a conference with Musa Kazim Pasha, head of the Arab Nationalist Movement in Palestine. Mr. Straus found Kazim Pasha had been led to believe that America would favor the Arab domination of Syria and Palestine. Mr. Straus made it clear to him that he had been incorrectly informed, that America had refused to interfere in any way, and that on the contrary the American Congress by joint resolution had given its approval of the Balfour (Zionist) Declaration.

ZIONIST ASPIRATIONS

Turning to the question of the Zionist aspirations in Palestine, Mr. Straus said:

"The chief hope of Palestine lies in its economic and industrial development, so that it can find employment for the right kind of immigrants. The element most likely to furnish the material for the reconstruction is one that is animated to come here and to make the needed sacrifices to bring it about—namely, the Jews. This reconstruction cannot fail to benefit the entire population, Moslem, Christian and Jew.

"Upon the whole," Mr. Straus continued, "I find the industrial conditions and possible prospects better than I had anticipated—while what may be styled political, must be handled with tact, circumspection and restrained patience, and left to the processes of revolution so as not to arouse the ugly passions of revolution on the part of the dominant races. Who naturally look with hostility upon an incoming people who are destined in time to outnumber them and surpass them in energy and enterprise.

"In the meantime, real statesmanly guidance on the part of the leaders, Zionists and others, is needed, and all arrogance must be checked. Nations, however small, require time to grow and develop, especially in a land which has been left to devastation for so many centuries. Let the Jews in and out of Palestine never cease to thank God for the protecting shield that Great Britain holds over them, for without that I would have very little hope, but with that everything is possible by degrees and in the fulness of time."

Parrots Are Stolen From Berlin Zoo

Berlin.—Four parrots were stolen from their cagrs in the Zoological Gardens one night recently. One of them is a splendid talker, and, oddly enough, another is the bird which the Berlin children like to hear exclaim, "Get the police."

Ten days previously two other parrots were stolen from the zoo, and reports from other German cities of the thefts of parrots suggests that a specialist is going around collecting them.

that was certain to be shown to all the inhabitants' country cousins whenever they came in for a visit.

ENLARGED BY LIAOS

Then the Liaos were overthrown in 1125 by the Nuchen Tartars and the proud young dagoba seemed doomed to a short but crowded life. The new conquerors, however, set a new style in conquests of that day by enlarging and adding buildings, instead of destroying wantonly, renamed the town Chung Tu, and ruled over the two cities nestling side by side in the dust storms that powdered Peking even then until they, in their turn, were overthrown by Ghenghis Khan in 1215. The Great Khan made the city the capital of China for the first time by establishing his court here in 1264 under the name of Khanbalygk, or City of The Khans, made famous by Marco Polo's description of it as ancient Cambalu.

A few years after making Cambula his capital the Great Khan richly embellished the White Dagoba and made it one of the show places of all China as a Lama Temple dedicated to the Buddha of Wisdom. The pinnacle, 270 feet from the ground, was covered with 500 pounds of gold and 200 pounds of silver and ornamented with magnificent bronze relief, and the body was adorned with costly jasper and bedecked with a gigantic string of pearls. Marble balustrades were added to the stairways. Now,—and long since—the gold and silver and jasper and pearls have gone and a weather-beaten copper umbrella encircles the once proud spire of the ancient edifice.

A NOTED BUDDHA

The temple prospered in its new raiment because it housed the most famous idol in Peking, the noted Shandalwood Buddha of fabulous price—the smallest of three that were made in Heaven under the eye of the Sakyamuni Buddha himself and consecrated by him as a true representation of his body before which the multitudes of the earth below might bow and pay homage. The Sandalwood Buddha when tapped by reverent hands gave forth a sound like sweetened bronze and its rich glossy lacquer which changed color miraculously according to the temperature and the light made it an image for which thousands of pilgrims trod many weary miles from distant places in the Empire to see, to kow-tow before, and to burn incense in wraithy spirals.

And most wonderful of all on the Sandalwood Buddha was a message from the Sakyamuni Buddha which read:

> "One thousand years after my entry into the Nirvana you (the Sandalwood Buddha) will travel to the land of the Chen T'an (China) to bring great bliss to the people and to lead them toward Heaven."

Seen from behind the Sandalwood Buddha, according to authentic descriptions left by the reverent monks—and one by the Emperor K'ang Hsi in his own handwriting—the head seemed forward in silent meditation. But from the front the head seemed lifted up in adoration to the Buddha of the Heavenly Paradise! One hand fell gracefully at its side, and the other was raised in blessing with the fingers joined together like the webbed foot of a Peking duck.

Is it any wonder that this miraculous Sandalwood Buddha brought riches beyond the dreams of Croesus to the Temple of The White Dagoba?

A MAGNET FOR BUDDHISTS

Its fame remained a magent for true Buddhists from far and near even after the Mings conquered the Great Khan's week-kneed and weak-minded successors and, jealous of the Khan's achievements and monuments, removed the capital to Nanking in the South, relegating Khanbalyk to a mere prefecture in 1368. The temple and dagoba were uncared for properly, however, and fell into evil days until Yung Loh removed the Ming capital back to Peking in 1411.

From that date begins the story of Peking's modern glory for Yung Loh and Chien Lung added monument after monument to the city and the White Dagoba was once more repaired and 108 small pillars, each adorned with an iron lantern were set up about the dagoba. With the ascension of the Empeor K'ang Hsi to the Dragon Throne, however, the White Daboga was doomed to become a ghostly reminder of its former grandeur and glory. K'ang Hsi became greatly interested in the Sandalwood Buddha, to such an extent, in fact, that he caused a special monastery to house it, and to it—the Hung Jen Ssu near the Pei Hai—the Sandalwood Buddha was removed when it was 2,700 years old to repose among the priceless treasures in embroideries from the Imperial looms, draperies, golden and silver altar vessels set with precious stones, until the Boxers looted and burned the monastery in 1900 and the Sandalwood Buddha disappeared for all time.

DESERTED BY PILGRIMS

With the passing of the Sandalwood Buddha from its precincts the White Dagoba was doomed. Pilgrims no longer flocked there in thousands to leave offerings at the Buddha's feet the famous portrait galleries disappeared, the wonderful medieval library slumbered beneath the cob-webs and dust until all the books were lost or stolen, and only a few curious Chinese and foreigners came to see the shadow of departed glories.

Now, with the exception of the Drum Tower in the northern part of the Tartar City, which was built in A. D. 1272, three years before Ser Marco Polo paid his first visit to Peking, and a few remnants of old city walls, none of the magnificent structures described by the great Venetian traveler are to be seen in the capital.

And there yesterday, while a little Mongol boy who acted as guide, threw back his pig-tail and played a, piquant little air on a Chinese flute as he leaned against one of the ancient votive lanterns and gazed down on the scene of the White Dagobas departed glories, the slop-slop-slop of the man mixing the mortar with which the dagoba will once more be repaired rang its own story.

Photographs of the Monastery of the White Dagoba appear in the Pictorial Section of this issue of The China Press.

universal good-will were to exist, it would be of great benefit, but it is the most difficult thing in the world to achieve."

"Our master says: 'It is because those who teach, the litterateurs and the eminent men, do not understand the great advantages of this principle that they speak thus. Take for example an assault on a city, a battle, or the sacrificing of one's own life for the sake of honor. Everybody has always regarded these acts as difficult. But if it please the commander to ask them, officers and men are capable of carrying them out. How much more easily should the people be able to follow the way of mutual good-will which is by nature so different."

"Yes, but the rulers and prominent men say: 'Ideally, the universal practice of good-will would be good, but it is an impossible dream. It is as if one should try to seize the mountain Tai and carry it across Ho or Chi."

"Our master said: 'That is a bad comparison. To pick up the mountain Tai and carry it across Ho or Chi might be called an extraordinary tour de force, and from antiquity to our day no one has ever done it. But how different is the law of universal good-will and mutual helpfulness! . . . Love of humanity is the great principle of the world; one must practice it even if he is the only one."

Notwithstanding Mo-ti's repeated assertions that his doctrine was not incompatible with the real human nature it never gained a secure foothold in the practical Chinese mind.

Speeding Is Major Cause Of Accidents

New York, May 3.—Statistics of Maryland and Massachusetts, where strict methods of traffic control are being employed, point to speeding as the major cause of automobile accidents.

According to a report made by Mr. George M. Graham, of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, 185 out of 522 traffic deaths in these two states were caused by speedsters. Intoxication caused 10 percent of the accidents.

As a result of the traffic deaths throughout the country, the N. A. C. C. which includes almost the entire industry, has pledged itself to help enforce laws for more rigid control of traffic violators.

"The automobile industry pledged its full support to every judge who imposes gaol sentences for proved offences, no matter how severe may be the penalty." Mr. Graham writes. "We believe also in the suspension or the revocation of the licence as a penalty.

"We purpose that, in addition to all penalties now imposed, the violater should forfeit possession of his automobile for a period to be determined according to the seriousness of the offence."

"I felt like that, too, but Sanatogen put me right again"

That is what thousands of men all over the world have told their friends. Sanatogen builds strength of nerves and body and conquers the general debility, which threatens to overtake a man in this climate.

A physician wrote in the Indian Medical Gazette: "For residents in tropical climates, suffering from general debility, the best and most assimilable food is a combination of casein with glycero-phosphate. For some years past I have used the preparation known as Sanatogen, which is composed of 95 per cent of pure casein and 5 per cent of glycero-phosphate and I have every reason to be satisfied with the results obtained."

More than 24,000 Physicians have enthusiastically recommended Sanatogen for its health-building and rejuvenating power.

GUNNERS TAKE RECS CRICKET XI INTO CAMP

Win By Margin Of Nine Runs On Loser's Grounds

EXCITING GAME

"B" Club Team Defeats "A" By 200 Runs

The League game played on the Recs ground between the Recreation Club and the Machine Gun Co., resulted in a narrow win for the latter by 9 runs, after a most exciting match.

The Gunners won the toss and batted first, after a disastrous start Leach went in and played a hard hitting 50, before he was caught and bowled by Divecha. He was lucky in being missed almost immediately and well partnered by Rogerson and Knight, was the mainstay of his side. Goldman who was also missed behind the wicket stayed in to make a valuable 42 runs which brought up the Machine Gunners score to a sound total of 162 runs.

The Recs also began badly Divecha was caught and bowled by Leach before he had scored. The Gunners attack and fielding was steady and kept down the score with the exception of Bhoora's 51 which was a splendid effort. With C. E. Ollerdessen and Main in for the last wicket and only 10 runs to win, Ollerdessen was run out through a misunderstanding with his partner due to over anxiousness, a long throw in by Duckett was responsible for this and found Ollerdessen yards out of his crease,

The bowling throughout the game was good, Ollerdessen and Rawsthorne meeting with most success, the former taking 7 wickets for 64 runs.

Muriel won the toss and elected to bat sending in Morriss and Evans a formidable opening pair. However Evans was caught by Beaumont off Carr after making 17. DOGGY DOGGEREL

(Written to all the dogs in the Dog Show).

You greet me with the breaking light
And caper to my outstretched hand,
My every step from morn till night
You watch and seem to understand.
At all such work as dogs can do
I find in you a helper too,
And in my sport you always share,
Thus helping drive away dull care.

If other brutes about the place
Get mean and sometimes vicious too
All I must do to teach them grace
Is merely hollah out for you.
I sleep secure when you stand guard,
No foe—man ventures near our yard;
No time so rough but if I call
You bravely come and dare it all.

Regardless what my fortunes be
And whether men shall scoff or praise,
You're still the same good friend to me
And change not with the changing days;
And every night when I come home—
Sometimes with less of joy than gloom—
Beside my gate you waiting stand
To hail me with a welcome grand,

Oh, friend of mine! To me so true!
While I have shelter, bread, and meat,
Beside my fire there's room for you.
Nor shall you want for ought to eat.
Ere human hands bring harm to thee
They first must do away with me.
For since to me you're always true
I'll be the same good friend to you.

DOGS

We have often heard of gay dogs who frequent both the race course or the Race Club but yesterday we were given an opportunity of seeing real reg'lar dogs—dogs who could trace their family tree back to the French poodle who came across the English channel with William the Konk, and dogs who had to admit that their mothers were sad flirts and lacked the sense of selection.

But we loved them all. He must be a mean hound who doesn't love a dog. Yesterday I noted one lady seated by the side of a little terrier. The lady was pretty. The looked she bestowed upon that fortunate little dog would warm the heart of many a lovely lad. In another part of the building sat a well-known and popular parson who was showing a wonk—"the finest dog in the world," he said. There was Mister Secretary Strachan, who has done so much to get the show going and make it a success; there was Mr. Springfield; there was Mr. Milne; there was every dog—lover in town, all out to admire "Man's best friend."

When you hear a fellow say he is "leading a dog's life" don't pity him again the dogs we saw yesterday are not to be pitied. There wasn't one of them who hadn't a bone to busy with, or an admirer to wag his tail for.

AT TIFFIN

I had the pleasure of tiffining with a brace of thoroughly good sportsmen last Thursday and in the same party was an American of distinct Irish ancestry, and a teller of tales who often cogitates over his "Morning Cup of Tea." The principals at this party were Captains Lincoln and Abbott. They are both of the U. S. Navy and I understand they leave us for a season—the summer season—tomorrow.

We hear a good deal about the "Silent Navy," which calls to mind the old yarn about Bill and Jim—two British tars—who were having a cup of "Korfee" and a "tuppennydoo," at Lockhart's, London. Jim was sipping his coffee with gusto and didn't care who knew it. Bill turned to him and said "'ere Jim, remember the silent navy."

Well these two good man and true could tell tales to make the very hairs stand straight on end, and I wanted to hear from them a little of their work in China waters, and a good deal about their work in connection with the American World Fliers. But they were certainly fine representatives of the "Silent Navy." I believe if one of them flew to the moon and held the "Man in the Moon" up to ransom he would look upon it as "all in a day's work."

These good folk—"Caps" Nelson and Abbott—have been looking after the fliers by sea. Boats have been detailed off to watch in relays the World fliers. Boats accompany them to Hongkong. Boats watch them as far as Calcutta, and then the landlubbers must look after the rest of the journey until the Atlantic is reached.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the boat or boats—I'm not sure which—that journeyed to the "Farthest North" of the Pacific under the command of Captain Abbott to watch for and help, if necessary, the fliers had as officers men with such appropriate names as Haile, Frost and Winters and the ship they sailed in was the Peary.

Yes, it was a very pleasant tiffin party. I introduced "Cap" Lincoln to a new kind of cigar, and another member of the party introduced us, or I should say entertained us over our coffee, with stories evolved over his "Morning Cup of Tea" which should prove useful as classics at the proposed "Summer School."

BOXING

We were all very sorry to see the popular Billy Tingle knocked out, last Thursday night at the New Carlton, by Johnny Hill. He is a gallant little fighter and without any conceit. He took his defeat like the sportsman he is. He was giving away six pounds and the other lad had both the height and the reach.

This Johnny Hill ought to go a long way. He is strong, he is young, he keeps himself fit and he loves the boxing game. He is not yet twenty. He easily makes the "feather weight" requirements. His stance worries the other man and when he gets in his punch the other man ceases to worry for quite a long time.

This same Johnny Hill will be seen again at the New Carlton next Thursday night and he will have as his opponent Garcia. Both lads are strong and both want to win. The meeting ought to supply plenty of thrills.

I am glad to see that the semi-final, (eight rounds,) will be twixt Young Gonzalo and Tigora. Some of us remember that the latter was knocked out by Gonzalo at the Stadium some weeks ago, but Tigora was not fit and had a

The writer was reading the other day some notes on ponies by the well known authority Sir J. C. Ewert, F.R.S. and he was rather amused when he came across the following sentence. "In measuring 11 inches from eye to nostril and 34 inches from elbow to ground and having a girth of only 60 inches this type departs decidedly from the pony standard and having fairly high withers—the result of a large head and not of a greater obliquity of the shoulders—they are unlike typical Eastern ponies."

So after all according to such authority, we were all wrong in claiming the big head as a distinguishing feature and special privilege of our Tartar ponies. However to one who has travelled considerably Mongolia and has also read the context of Sir J. C. Ewert's remarks the anomaly ceases to be such. As explained quite recently by the present writer the big head was not typical of the Tartar pony as a class or species but typical of the Tartar Mountain pony. Sir J. Ewert was writing also of the mountain ponies of the Connemara district of Galway and his experience of the Eastern type related to Arabs and Persian Arabs as seen in India, Egypt and the polo grounds at home.

It will be therefore seen, that in areas far removed from the Tartar lands environment is recognised as having its effect upon conformation. Sir J. Ewert gives the following measurements as typical in relation to the ponies with which he was dealing. Height of withers at that point vertically above the point of the elbow, with pony standing firmly and straight upon its feet 14 hands 0 inches. Length from elbow to ground 34 inches, from hock to the ground 22 inches, girth 60 inches, circumference below the knee 7½ inches, ears 5½ inches; head from occipital ridge to line between upper margin of nostrils 21 inches, between the eyes and the nostril 11 inches and between the canther of eyes 7½ inches.

FIGURES CORRESPOND

These measurements, or rather a majority of them, seeming somewhat familiar to the writer, he looked up some of his notes on Mongolian types of ponies, made in Mongolia over 20 years ago, and found these measurements corresponded proportionately with the types he had measured on the southwest slopes of the Khingan Range and also on the high plateau of Burghara Khan a southeastern offshoot of the Altai mountains.

It is curious that another paragraph in Sir J. Ewerts treatise on the Connemara pony should be almost identical with notes made by the present writer over twenty years ago in relation to the ponies of the upland plateaus and steppes of Mongolia. The paragraph reads "one of the great advantages of these ponies is that they have not suffered from in and in breeding, hence—unless they happen to be prepotent—they readily assimilate the more marked points of other breeds."

The writer in April, 1921, attempted to point out that the Tartar pony was such an admixture of various Arab stocks that only in case of, what is known as a reversion to type was there any outstanding feature of the Tartar pony distinguishing his siring or ancestry. History, through approximately three centuries, tells us of continuous imports of the Arab strain from the three great Arab families, first as a result of Tartar trading in the vast regions lying between Cathay and the Levant and subsequently as exacted tribute, resulting from Tartar conquests in those same regions.

If three centuries of such crossings and importations has not destroyed the Tartar ponies capacity for giving us good and sport-

MRS. HICKS AND MR. WHITAMORE WIN AT TENNIS

Woman Player Faints Twice, Due To Recent Illness

In a hard-fought and intensely interesting match, Mrs. E. P. Hicks and Mr. C. E. Whitamore yesterday won the Mixed Doubles Championship of the Shanghai Lawn Tennis Association from Mr. and Mrs. J. Elmore after three exciting sets, Mrs. Hicks, who has been ill recently, collapsing at the conclusion of the contest.

The final round was played on the Majestic Hotel courts, the attendance taxing the capacity of the grounds to the utmost.

The first was won handily by Mr. and Mrs. Elmore, 6-3. In the second set Mrs. Hicks and Mr. Whitamore reversed the order, winning 6-3. The final set was a dingdong battle, going to 4 all, and then Mrs. Hicks and her partner in a slashing finish took the championship, 6-4.

As the game ended, Mrs. Hicks, who has not been in the best of health lately, fainted. She was taken inside the hotel and restored to consciousness and gamely came back for the prize presentations. The ceremony had only started, however, when she again collapsed and was taken home.

In Mrs. Hicks' absence, Mr. Whitamore received the Mixed Doubles Championship cup, the presentations being made by Lady Turner.

The match yesterday was umpired by Capt. E. I. M. Barrett.

Mr. Walter M. Chen, coach, presented the team with a silk flag of China. Mr. Dome, manager of the team, responded in fitting terms, thanking the members of the Association for their good wishes.

GEORGE DUNCAN DEFEATS BARNES AT GLENEAGLES

American Player Is Put Out In Semi-Final Round

(Reuter's Service)

Gleneagles, June 13.—In the semifinals of the Thousand Guineas Professional Golf Tournament, Abe Mitchell (North Foreland) beat R. Wilson (Croham Hurst), 4 up and 3 to play, and George Duncan (Hanger Hill) beat the American, Jim Barnes, by 2 and 1.

Barnes's short game was again a feature of the play, but Duncan was in fine form and frequently made most brilliant approaches. Duncan was 2 up at the turn and became dormie 3. Barnes won the sixteenth hole and halved the seventeenth.

Mitchell was four up at the sixth. He turned with 2 up and won comfortably.

In the preceding third round Mitchell beat De La Torre by one hole, Wilson beat Smith by 5 and 4, Barnes beat Boomer by one hole and Duncan beat Ray by 3 and 2.

Harry Kingman Breaks Up Baseball Game With Terrific Home Run Clout

First Sacker Smashes Ball To Nethermost Section Of The Rhubarbs With Two On; Final Score Is 5 To 1 For Gallopers

By Westa

Harry Kingman, who ordinarily is a peaceful and law abiding citizen, went out to the Recreation Ground yesterday and without any provocation whatever proceeded to bust up three of the usual Saturday afternoon pastimes that were in progress there, including a baseball game, a cricket match and a lawn bowls contest.

Harry's conduct was beyond comprehension. If one of those Broadway beachcombers were to do such a thing the molested parties would simply put it down to a snoot full of Hongkew hootch, but Harry is a quiet, easy going goof who never was known to indulge in anything stronger than ginger pop, and that only on very special occasions like the Fourth of July.

Harry's lapse from grace came in the third inning of the baseball game, after Howland and Bullard had horned onto the bases as the result of successive singles. Harry then stepped up and when Hon. Japanese pitcher flang one to his liking he tore into it so viciously that the cricket players who were enjoying their innocent pastime out beyond centerfield had to drop their wickets and run for all they were worth to escape having their legs torn off. By rare good fortune they got out of range just in time to see the sizzling pellet hop over the fence into the lawn bowls enclosure, whereat there was another mad scramble to escape annihilation.

HARRY SMOLE

While all this was going on Harry galloped around the bases and came in with a big grin on his face, just as though he thought all those other athletes went out there for was to have their afternoon spoiled.

Whether they went out there for that purpose or not, that is exactly what happened to them, particularly the Japanese baseball players and their numerous friends in the stands and along the sidelines. After that clout they had about as many thrills left as there would be left of a lone tomato can in an alley full of goats.

This gorgeous wallop from the Kingman bat was naturally all the white meat and most of the stuffing of the opening clash between the Gallopers and the Japanese players from Formosa, who are in our midst for a series of games.

Aside from that one inning it was a fairly even game, and a fairly interesting one. There were numerous scintillating plays, and some good battery work on both sides.

Verne Claire did the heaving for our gang, and convinced the fans and fanoritas that Shanghai is going to have a pitcher this summer that will keep them all breaking their backs.

HOW WE SCORED

Shanghai began the scoring in the second frame, when Claire hit one down the right field line for two bases, went to third on an overthrow and cashed when Buck Taylor lifted a tall sacrifice fly to right. Our final counter was accumulated in the fourth session when Buck Taylor stopped one with his tokus, was pushed around to third on Stark's smart smack to center, and tallied on an error by Hon. shortstop.

The visitors got a run in the seventh, on two successive blows, one of them a twobagger. In the ninth they got two men on after Claire had tossed out the first man up, but failed to score, thanks to a magnificent heave from right by Hudford Taylor, which cut Hon. catcher down at the plate. That left two Japanese on bases and a flock of rattles in Japanese throats, but the promising young broker who was looking after our exchange transactions offered three fast ones to the next batter at a fair price, but the batter evidently thought the rate wasn't right, for he waved them away. That ended the old ball game.

BY WESTA

Same teams again today at 4 p.m.

There was a good crowd out, including many pretty girls, all of whom certainly looked cool and nifty in their summery frocks.

President Fred McIntyre stood at the gate to welcome the customers, and beamed happily when everybody complimented him on the nice new stands. Fred certainly is deserving of a flock of credit for the way he is managing the business end of the club.

Verne Claire certainly looked good out there on the hill. He had a world of speed, a good change of pace and first class control. Beside all that he is so big and looks so capable that the opposition is scared half to death before the game starts. In golf Verne would be what the bunker jumpers call a mental hazard.

This boy Taveres, who is doing the backstopping for us this year, looks to be the best mittman we have had for many years. He held Claire's speed with the utmost ease, caught a runner by a quick snap to first, gathered in a high, twisting foul, held the runners close to the bags, and injected a lot of pep into his teammates. Aside from all that the boy didn't do a thing yesterday.

Jerry Thatch looks a bit out of place at the hot corner, but that is perhaps because everybody is so accustomed to seeing him at second. He made a nice grab of Minomiya's high foul yesterday He also got a hit and stole two bases.

Stark made a marvelous stop of a blow from Tonioko's bat in the eighth, running far to his right and spearing the ball by a desperate bare handed grab. It would have been a homer if he hadn't intercepted it. Nobody thought he could get it, or knew that he did get it, and there were numerous exclamations of amazement when he straightened up for the throw in. He looks like a real outer gardener.

Hudford Taylor made a beautiful peg in the ninth to catch Kishima at the plate, and got him, too. The catcher was on third and when Hudford gathered in the Japanese third baseman's high fly he made a dash for home. "Tay" heaved on a line to Taveres, who tagged his man five feet from the plate. The throw nearly tore Hudford's arm off.

Ol' Mal Maloney was out there, chirping as usual. Herby had him booked to play second, but he tried to stop a batted ball with his eye during infield practice and had to retire to the coaching lines. One of these days Mal will be appointed ambassador to Patagonia, or some other place a million miles from here, whereupon the fans will be inconsolable.

The outfield, with the two Taylors and Stark on the defense, looks like the w.k. stone wall. More power to their flippers, hey?

The Japanese base umpire certainly didn't give Watanabe any the best of it on Jerry's throw to nip him at first in the third. His decision against Tonioko on Taveres' snap throw to Kingman might have been called the other way, too, without causing anything in the nature of a riot. One trouble with those Japanese umpires is that they are so straight that they sometimes lean over backward.

nasty boil over his left eye. He went into the ring in order not to disappoint the fans. He's all right now and will not disappoint the fans next Thursday.

The following week—and on Thursday—Billy Tingle meets Rufe Canon for the bantam weight title of the Far East. Both boys must get down to the 118 pound limit.

Most of you have heard that Billy's friend and rival, George Mendies, met his death recently after a bout with Harry Gordon. This has upset our bantam a good deal. I append a notice about this wonderful little lad which appeared in "The Sun."

George Mendes, flyweight champion of Australia, and one of the cleverest exponents of the fistic art ever seen in the Commonwealth, is dead.

He died in the small hours of this morning at St. Vincent's Hospital, where he was taken on Saturday night after being knocked out by Harry Gordon, the Victorian bantam.

Mendies, who had boxed brilliantly throughout, lacked the strength of his sturdy opponent, who in the fifteenth round shot a heavy punch to the jaw. It floored the champion, who fell backward, striking the back of his head on the canvas floor. He was carried to his corner unconscious, and the ministrations of his seconds being unsuccessful in bringing him to, he was taken to the hospital, and despite every effort, he never rallied.

It is a sad end to a brilliant ring career.

Mendies was immensely popular, not only among his friends of Pyrmont, where he lived and among whom he was known by the nick-name of "Dixie," but among all followers of boxing. For not only was he a wonderfully skilful boxer, a plucky one, and at all times a scrupulously fair one, but he also behaved himself out of the ring like a quiet, unassuming little gentleman. Success never spoiled him.

Mendies has been spoken of as the "Jimmy Wilde of Australia," and that famous little boxer has been frequently called the Wizard of the Ring. There were many times when Mendies' ringcraft almost amounted to wizardry. For years past no lad of his weight—Mendies was normally about 7st. 10lb. or less—had a chance with him, and he cheerfully gave away half a stone in weight or more to his opponents.

Mendies leaves a widow and a small family. He would have turned 26 next month.

slips which went to the boundary. Morriss soon settled down and played a very fine innings, being particularly strong on the off. He was caught by Murphy off Carr for 77 runs when the score was 153. Gardiner unexpectedly played a fine 42 before he was bowled by Murphy. With Muriel and Peck in the total passed the 200 mark and the innings was declared closed.

Against this large total "A" never looked like winning, from the start wickets fell rapidly under the bowling of O'Hara and Peck. Leslie hit out well and though being missed twice he compiled 20 runs the highest score of his side.

It generally happens that a side which has fielded in a strong light for three hours generally fail to give a very good account of themselves. This game was no exception to the rule. Thus a great deal depends on a spin of the coin during these summer months.

Artificial Restrictions Sure To Injure Racing In China If Not Stopped By Clubs

ing racing, then it is absolute nonsense to try and convince the racing community that the practically few Russian stallions from Russia are going to produce a so called half bred, which will mean the death of sporting and amateur racing in Shanghai and the other treaty ports of China. The time must come when those stallions must die and the resulting strain must soon lose its identity by continuous absorption into that much more strongly identified cross the Tartar Arab of Mongolia.

ARTIFICIAL LIMITATIONS

If we would not kill sport entirely we must, as soon as possible, break away from the artificial limitations with which attempts have been made to shackle racing in China by men who have not the capacity of taking the long view, through no fault of their own. There can be little doubt the distinctly amateurists attempts to legislate in the direction of restriction has brought about chaos in our racing world. It has incubated a spirit of petty rivalry and jealousy absolutely alien to the sport of kings. One noticeable feature at recent meetings, in this petty jealousy direction, is the absence of the old time applause, on the part of the crowd, when any pony, belonging to any one closely mixed up in the controversy, happens to be the first past the post. This surely is an indication that the crowd strongly disapproves of recent happenings in the turf world and after all it is the crowd that pays the piper and it is the wise man who recognises the truth in the old score "He who pays the piper calls the tune."

The crowd want to see the best running of the very best ponies the most sporting owners can produce. What of the favor with which the crowd look upon Ataman? Is not Old Bill on a similar pedestal with Ataman? Is there not general regret heard on all sides at the reports of Abbeyfield being under suspicion, as the vets say? Were there not regrets heard on all sides, when it was reported recently that City of Peking was indisposed? Did not racing rivals go to the owner of Robbery, when he seemed to come in lame after winning a recent race and hoped that nothing was wrong and that he would still be able to play a prominent part in the race for the Kiangwan Derby Cup.

SEEK THE BEST

There is deep down in our hearts that great sporting instinct which likes to see the very best racing that can be produced from the best racing material available, no matter who the owner is. It is only the falsest of atmospheres that has enshrouded us in the befogging mists of petty jealouny and suspicion. To Hades with the atmosphere and all that produced it. Let each and all of us come out again into that clear brightness that surrounds the throne of sport and be glad in him, who ever he may be who happens to have the best, no matter what the shape or size, so long as all is on the square as it should be in the realms of sports.

Through recent turf legislation it became necessary to have recourse to a Pony Selection Committee and a very brave body of men were found willing to devote their time to that most difficult of all tasks in this world, "the attempt to achieve the impossible." You cannot begin to attempt to separate crossbreds from nothing else but crossbreds, which have been nothing but cross breds for centuries. Much more to the point and of much more advantage to racing would be the setting up of a Pony Selection Committee, if they had the ability, to cast out all duds, with which dealers in the past have caught local racing suckers, and let nothing in that has not a fair chance of showing racing speed and giving the small owner something that would give him a fair run for his money, instead of running up fodder bills for pure unadultered hair trunks. Such a step would be in the direction of protecting the interest of the small owner or he who in America would be dubbed "a new chum."

"A hair perhaps divides the False and True;
Yes; and a Single Alit were the Clue—
Could you but find it— . . ."

THE STICK

Could we but find it? The present writer has strongly advocated the stick and guided by the limitations of the stick let 'em all come. The law of England permits a man to "use upon his wife a stick no thicker than his little finger," evidently thinking that such a stick could take her measure and such measure was sufficient in the direction of restriction. The law of England did not make any reference to her breeding or suggest that the man should only exercise his power of prerogative over the cross bred. It simply gave him the power of the rod over all his cattle irrespective of breed. Now there was once a wise old Scotchman who is reported to have said woman and horses are kittle cattle. So the impression is left in the mind of the humble racing man of the Orient that what the law says is good enough for the women cattle is good enough for the pony cattle. That is take the measure and the quality of both by the rod.

To indicate in some slight way the impossibility of the task which the Pony Selection Committee have so bravely undertaken it is well to refer again to Sir J. Ewert, a man whose life hobby, outside his scientific research, was the attempt to localise the origin of horses and ponies that he found in Ireland. He admits it was a most difficult one and that his task was only made possible by historic research. In dealing with the ponies of the Connemara district of County Galway, an area at the outside about 480 square miles and in which he spent many summers devoted to his research, he found five types of Connemara ponies.

Does not Connemara and its 480 square miles and five types of Connemara pony make the very Amateur Pony Selection Committee tremble at the task of classifying the types of ponies in the 800,000 square miles of Mongolia which they have never visited. Truely fools step in where angels fear to tread. Is it purely collosal conceit or is it the valor of ignorance that makes men attempt to achieve the impossible.

CAN NOT CLASSIFY

Is it possible for any body of inexperienced amateurs, sitting in comfortable armchairs in the treaty ports of China, to achieve, in relation to the 800,000 square miles of Mongolia, that which took an expert like Sir J. Ewert several summers to achieve in relation to the 480 square miles of the Connemara district of Galway in Ireland. The sooner the racing communities realise, through their sense of proportion, that any attempts at classification are only a delusion and a snare so much the better for racing. To quote again Sir J. Ewert, "amongst Arabs and other eastern breeds there is a considerable range of variation just as there is variation amongst the oldest strain of Norwegian and other western breeds." The following quotation from the same author is very interesting if associated with the supposed standards upon which the so called China pony is classified, "the sturdy, shortlegged, long headed race which roved over the hills and valleys of Europe after the great Ice age came to an end," which would tend to prove that the contention of the present writer that such characteristics are merely the results of topographical environment rather than geographical distribution.

Again a quotation from the same expert authority. "Today there is a complete want of uniformity, doubtless because the people of Connemara unlike the Anazah and other desert Arabians have long been breeding from all sorts and conditions of mares and have been, as a rule, strongly indifferent as to the pedigree of the stallion." This remark seems to be very like the present writers reference to the promiscuity of the pony breeding in Mongolia in the past.

BETTER PRICES

As in all other countries the Mongols have begun to learn that pedigreed uniformity and breeding by selection will mean better prices in future, and therefore worth striving for. Apparently the only places where improvement in type, through breeding by selection, is banned, is in the foreign and international racing centers of China. Surely it has been the general contention of foreign Communities in China that foreign influence has been in the direction of progress and is it to be said that only in the realms of the sport of kings, foreign influence has been in the direction of retrogression. Let us remember that make, docility, intelligence and speed, the qualities we most desire in our animals for racing and backing purposes, are largely a matter of inheritance, while endurance and hardiness are the products of surroundings. In Mongolia the surrounding are and always will be there and we cannot alter them but we can help on the good work of improving those most desirable qualities of mare, docility, intelligence and speed by not attempting to obstruct the Mongol or Burriat efforts at breeding by selection instead of the old breeding by promiscuity.

Certain racing rules have done enough in China to dam the path of progress by confining racing to geldings only. One of the great justifications for racing at all in other parts of the world has been its influence upon the improvement of breed. By the barring of stallions and mares in our treaty port racing we have gone a long way, if not too far, already on the downward road, where the sport of kings reaches the level of purely sordid gambling, without any justification outside the resulting turn over of the pari mutual.

TYPE CLINGS TO TYPE

For the past year steps have been taken still further on the downward path by the barring or attempts at barring anything that shows an improved appearance as a result of breeding by selection. It is curious that even in racing realms how type seems to cling to type, how the well bred desire association of their sport with the products of the well bred! How the low born are content with the progeny of the obviously promiscuous. There are always those to be found, who cannot rise above a certain level and who desire everything surrounding them to remain on that level. Thank goodness in the racing world they are in the minority and although, through the fact of their being a noisy minority, they have had their way, when the noise dies down, there will be a chance for quiet reason gaining the ascendant and the racing community will raise racing above the degrading standard of mine and the other fellows.

The types who would strike out of racing anything pertaining to a system of breeding by selection are the types who are content, on a glorious Spring or early summer afternoon, to desert the heaven sent gift of fresh open air and convert the sport of kings to a system of balls slipping along sloping wires, in the befogged atmosphere of a room in slums of West Hongkew. The only pretensions that such a pernicious amusement could possibly have to a resemblance to the sport of kings is in the giving to the soulless balls the names of some of our most famous racing ponies as if to justify the sor"'nes" of the soulless pastime. What happens with the balls on the sloping wires should be sufficient warning to those who have the best interests of racing in China at heart that all is not well with the child of our pleasure and everything should be done to elevate and improve it including the improving of the breed which makes for true sport.

"GELDING ONLY"

There can be no doubt in the minds of any who have traveled extensively in Mongolia and made themselves fully acquainted with the historic origin of the Tartarised Arab that the ponies of that vast country, owing to their ancestry, particularly lend themselves to improvement through breeding by selection. The best way to assure that breeding will be carried out by a process of selection and particularly selection of the sire is to revert to the day when the words "Geldings only" were unknown in our race program.

Let us race the stallions and mares under a system of Racing Clubs ownership, with the racing career of stallion or mare leased out to members say for 4, 5 or 6 years under a system of ballot, after which racing period the stallion or mare would revert to the Racing Clubs pool which would return them to their natural environment for carrying on the good work of reproducing their species under a system of control and selection. This suggestion may not at first appeal to the racing communities generally but the more closely it is gone into the greater will be the appeal to our higher instincts as sportsmen.

The portion of this suggestion dealing with the leasing of the racing career by ballot brings to mind a most admirable suggestion recently put forward by a very shrewd and far seeing member of the silk and pigskin fraternity at a jockeys farewell dinner to a brother jockey. His remarks were to the effect that the two local race clubs should buy up the mobs of the dealers as they come down to Shanghai, provided those mobs come up to standard, and not down to standard at an upset price of $400 to $600 per head as deemed fit by the clubs.

Then that members could put down their names for as few or as many ponies as they like. Then after there would be a drawing not for ponies but for priority of selection, a system that would give far greater satisfaction all round than does the present absurd one of subscription hair trunks and mere fodder consumers. This system would not deprive the man with the heaven sent gift 'of an eye for a horse' from giving full scope to his powers of selection. This system though by no means doing away with the powers of the man with a long purse, for buying the best goods at the best price would be putting that price in the pocket of his brother racing man usually described as the small owner, if the latter lucky selector cared to part with his selection. In fact the system would do away with any cause of complaint on the part of the so-called small owner. Over a year ago we were asked to give highly experimental legislation a trial. The trial was given and the legislation has proved the absolute failure that was predicted for it by those who were given heads to think with and not to be used as becoming and graceful adjuncts to a tailor made appearance. The suggestion of the above mentioned jockey at the jockeys dinner might be given a fair trial as it could not prove a greater failure than the attempts at restrictive legislation attempted by racing bodies throughout China during the 1923-1924 racing year. In the words of a certain gentleman at a certain meeting "All I ask you is give it a trial." Thus through experiment in the right direction will "The winters of our discon-

Tennis Rule Revision May Follow War.

The action of Vincent Richards, Yonkers (N. Y.) tennis star, in joining William T. OVER 300 DOGS EXHIBITED AT ANNUAL SHOW

Championship Cups Go To F. B. Scott And Mrs. Sevregardus

The Shanghai Dog Show, with an entry of nearly 350 high class canines, covering a wide range of breeds, proved a most successful affair at the Race Course yesterday. It was deserving of a great deal larger attendance that appeared, though several hundred dog owners and fanciers availed themselves of the unusual privilege of seeing so many fine animals. Tennis and other sports so well favored by the weather of yesterday, however, seemed to take toll of the many who would otherwise have visited the show.

The show was excellently handled and the promoters are deserving of high praise.

Of the many dogs shown, probably the pointer class deserved to be ranked first, while The Alsatians were strongest in point of numbers. The wonk class, which was expected to bring out a large number of entries, totalled in the neighborhood of a score, but the entries were all good.

Champions of the show, and taking the cups provided for such, were Mr. F. B. Scott's Boston bull terrier dog Laddy Boy and Mrs. Schregardus' Japanese spaniel bitch Kiku-san, these being judged the best dog and bitch at the show.

ELCANO DEFEATS STEWART IN FINE GAME BY 6 TO 5

Navy Players In Great Form; Griffith Fans 16 Men

Continuing their winning streak, the baseball players of the U. S. S. Elcano scored another victory Friday over the team from the U. S. Stewart. The score was 6 to 5.

Griffith, who was on the mound for the Elcano lads, pitched his usual wonderful game. He always was cool in tight places, and had a world of speed and curves, retiring no less than 16 men on strikes, against 4 of his opponent. The up-river lads hit the ball hard and frequently and only the able defense of the Stewart players saved them from a worse defeat.

The game was originally set for seven innings, but as the score was tied at the end of that session another inning was played. In the eighth "Tarheel" Lisk of the Elcanos got on first via a hot single over second, and immediately stole second and third. Griffith then knocked a hot one to the shortstop who threw wild to the plate, enabling the Elcano runner to score the winning run.

Lisk had a fine day, with four hits to his credit, including a homer and a two bagger. Jenkins, also of the Elcano, slammed out a homer, as did Schilke of the Stewart.

The Elcano boys are now all set to trim the Gallopers next Wednesday. The score by innings:

Elcano	1	0	0	1	3	0	0	1	6	9	3
Stewart	0	3	0	0	1	1	0	0	5	3	2

Increasing Debts To America Exercise Minds Of Students Of Economics

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Bremen, May 7.—Economic minds in Europe are much exercised at Europe's increasing indebtedness to America and at Europe's inability to reverse this condition by exports to the U. S. In 1923 American imports from Europe came to 1157 million dollars (in 1922, 991 million). America's export to Europe, on the other hand, amounted in 1923 to 2,093 million (1922, 2,083 million). Europe, took in 1923 50 per cent. (1922 54 per cent.) of the total exports of the U. S., but her share of the total imports of the U. S. was only 30½ per cent. (1922 31½ per cent.). Thus in two years America delivered goods to Europe worth 8 milliards of gold marks more than the goods she received from Europe, thereby upsetting the economic balance with a vengeance.

Curiosities Of Matrimony

That a wife may be discarded like an old suit when you get tired of her seems to have been the conclusion drawn from Bolshevist practice by one Quirin Hardt. On this principle he married three wives one after the other. The first matrimonial venture was made in Russia where Trotzky's example in ridding himself of an encumbering spouse fired Hardt to do likewise. Unfortunately for him, his first wife did not share his views about matrimony. She claimed him from his third partner with the result that Hardt as a German subject, learned that Germany has not yet adopted Bolshevist views of the marriage tie. For his frivolous views on matrimony the court sentenced him to penal servitude for a year and a half. As he had just remarked that he would prefer 20 years of such existence rather than return to his first partner, one would have expected him to show satisfaction at his sentence. Far from it. His emotional excitement resulted in a violent attack of cramps. And now comes the remarkable part of the story. His three female victims full of pity for the prisoner and of fury against his judge, flung themselves on the prisoner, vying with one another to restore him.

Nationalists Get Excited

Nationalist circles in France and Germany are exploding with wrath over the fact that for the first time for about ten years a German cyclist took part in a race in Paris, while a Frenchman did the same in Berlin. Both parties in both countries exhaust their vocabulary in denouncing the action. Perhaps the whole thing was, as is suggested by the Kreuz Zeitung, a clever bit of propaganda for attracting a sensation-loving public. Nationalists have, it seems, no objections to private individuals dealing with French business houses and growing rich thereby. They are singularly silent on the subject of the stream of Germans who invaded France lately, to take advantage of the fall of the franc. Do they suppose that these people were not on friendly terms with the French with whom they came in contact? The explanation of their attitude lies elsewhere. The Nationalists want the plebs for their purposes. Hate must be kept alive in the heart of the masses, else is their policy vain. Hence their indignation at such episodes.

Production In Europe Wanes

A disquieting feature of Europe's economic life since the War is the falling off of its productivity. The following table taken from the yearly report of the Hamburg Harbor Committee shows the difference between the work accomplishd in 1913 and that of the years after the War.

	Quay Stowage per man and day
	tons
1913	4.40 tons 9.90
1921	2.73 tons 7.75
1922	2.58 tons 6.11
1923	2.30 tons ..... 5.25.

In one of Austria's biggest coal mining concerns the miner's output of coal is 166 tons a year instead of 222 as in 1913.

Switzerland and Italy tell a similar tale. Europe is steadily falling behind America. Whereas America has increased her production since 1913 by 34 percent, Europe has decreased hers by 42 percent.

German Shipping Activity In 1923

The Wester Zeitung is wroth with the Scandinavian Shipping Gazette for using the head-line "Pre-War Traffic exceeded" in an article on German Shipping Activity in 1923. German shipping it is true, reached 99 percent of that of 1913, but this, as the paper points out, does not mean that it has exceeded the pre-War volume. We are reminded that many German vessels put into German ports with part cargoes or leave in ballast, further that numbers of foreign vessels visit German ports without German companies being a penny the better fr it.

Astrology Is Latest Rage

Mankind loves the occult. In the brain of the most rational human there is often a sub-conscious hankering after it. But the occult has its fashions like everything else. The latest rage is astrology. Crystal-gazing, palmistry and cards have lost something of their lustre. Astrology enjoys so far a kind of scientific nimbus. We are told that it plays a much greater part in the life of today than one imagines, that more people are busy casting horoscopes than one dreams of. It is stated that in America and England many banks and big businesses consult astrologers.

America is even said to have determined the most auspicious moment for her entry into the Great War by astrological means! The Astrological Calendar published by A. Frank Glahn of Oldesloe is filled with astrological prophecies. It is admitted that most of these are rubber-like and can be so

Clyde Wins Contracts For New Light Cruisers

Improvement In Scottish Shipbuilding Center In April

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Glasgow, May 3.—The contracts for the new light cruisers have gone almost as everyone expected. The hull and machinery of one of the ships are to be built by the Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Co., Govan, and the hull and machinery of the other by Vickers, (Limited), Barrow-in-Furnace. One of the orders for the propelling machinery for one of the three ships to be built in the Royal Dockyards has gone to Messrs. William Beardmore and Co., Dalmuir.

I am informed that the actual tender prices quoted by the various shipbuilders in this connection were not given the same weighty consideration by the Admiralty as is usual in normal times. The desire to distribute the work between the various districts suffering most heavily from unemployment weighed heavily with the Government; indeed the Clyde would not have been getting more than its fair share—on a price basis—had it built the two ships and engines and one of the engines for the dockyard ships.

In tendering for the cruisers the real problem which the shipbuilders had to face was the design of engines of sufficient power to fall within the weight limits defined by the Admiralty. The ships are to be built according to the Washington Conference limit, that is, they are not to exceed 10,000 tons displacement. Machinery of 80,000 horse-power is to be installed, and the Admiralty fixed a further weight limit for this tem. None of the nine tenderers, I am informed, were able to conform to this condition but the Fairfield Company required the smallest excess allowance of any of the firms—a matter of 54 tons or so. It is gratifying to know that the Clyde has not yet lost its well known supremacy in engineering affairs.

SHIPBUILDING IN APRIL

A considerable improvement has taken place in the shipbuilding outlook recently. This is a result mainly of the withdrawal of the lock-out notices, the reference of wages questions to arbitration, and the fact that good work is being done in all the yards by men for whom employment has been found. The moral effect of the success of the Clyde yards who tendered for the cruisers is also not by any means a negligible factor.

In addition to the cruiser contracts, already referred to, there are reported the following mercantile orders as having been placed during April: Scotts, Greenock, to build a motor ship, 425 feet in length for Messrs. Holt of Liverpool; Messrs. John Brown of Clydebank to build a large motor propelled oil tanker for owners whose name has not been disclosed; Messrs. Charles Connel of Scotstoun and Messrs. William Hamilton of Port Glasgow to build each a turbine steamer of 430 feet length for the Brocklebank Line; and the Ailsa Shonbuilding Company, Ayr and Troon, to build two small cargo vessels for Glasgow owners.

There were launched all over Scotland during April 27 vessels of 42,444 tons. Of these, 21 of 34,114 tons were built on the the Clyde and the others on the East Coast. The Clyde total compares with 16 of 58,218, tons in March, 13 of 19,607 tons in

Ireland Of Today Is A Disillusioned Land

BY KATHERINE TYNAN
In The Weekly Westminster

Coming back to Ireland after an absence which covered the worst days of the Revolution, what strikes one most profoundly is the general disillusionment. I wonder if there is an enthusiasm left in the Ireland of today. I very much doubt it, though there are fanaticisms. For one thing, the people are exhausted. A couple of years of Civil War is a terrible thing. The bright dream which kept Ireland romantic through the centuries has vanished, and the people are oddly cynical. There is a phrase which one meets on everyone's lips when something we are all ashamed of has happened; "Och, holy Ireland!" with a throw back of the head. We have come out of a national vanity which was imposed upon us by the press, the pulpit, the orators, and the poets, to this state of blank disillusionment.

Dublin is very said. She had always great wide streets, having been built in the eighteenth century by great builders and artists for a capital city. She used to be a queen, mourning among her memories. She is no longer a queen. She is a lonely, drab old city; very empty, very dusty, and robbed by her children of her most beautiful things. It was bad enough when Dublin people threw a hideous bridge between the incomparable beauty of the Custom House at dawn and dusk and the City. It was not Republican virtue past or present that battered down the Custom House and brought the Four Courts to ruin. The Republic should stand for all.

Dublin never dresed well except in Horse Show week. As long as I rmember it, the tweed coat and skirt was the wear of its women. It may have been the climate. One is seldom safe in wearing one's best hat in Dublin or in Ireland. It is a rainy country. To wear such garments as are worn in London in Dublin would be to provoke much staring. In the old days, when a party of visitors at the Vice-Regal or the Chief Secretary's Lodge lit down at a Grafton Street shop from their carriages and motors, it was as though a brilliant flower-bed had suddenly shaken out its contents. The dressing is dingier than ever today. A vast middle-class, the existence of which one did not suspect, seems suddenly to have overspread Dublin. It is the equivalent of the lower middle-class in England.

There is a general lack of energy—unless among the young people who dance. Apparently theirs is the feverish dancing which is an after-effect of war. It is difficult to realise that this Dublin is the laughter-loving, story-telling Dublin of old. I can remember Dublin as a place whose citizens button-holed each other with unashamed laughter in the public thoroughfares—when Dublin loved news like the Athenians, when it was a cultivated city. If you live at a little distance from Dublin, even

Belfast To Liverpool Air Mail

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Belfast, May 7.—The air mail service between Belfast and Liverpool is to open soon. All preparations are now complete. The Malone aerodrome is ready for use, and it has been decided to use two aeroplanes, and to keep the third in reserve for emergency.

The enterprise will be controlled by Northern Air Lines, a combination of local organisations, who have given a financial guarantee, and general supervision will be exercised by Captain Grieg, who has charge of the London and Paris air mail service.

The speeding up of the mails will be a great boon. At present, letters posted in Belfast for England, reach the destination by the following midday. Under the new arrangement mails posted in Belfast before 5:30 p.m. will reach some parts of England the same evening, and Paris by 10 a.m. the following morning.

Mails from England will be landed at the Belfast aerodrome at 7:30 a.m., and there will be despatches from Belfast at 5.30 p.m. and 10 a.m.

The machines to be used are of the most up to date type, and are able to fly in the teeth of a sixty-mile gale, so that the service will not be hindered by weather conditions. The charges are quite reasonable, letters are to cost 2d instead of 1½d, and parcels, probably 2½d per lb. Passenger fares for a single journey will probably be fixed at £3 per person.

Shipbuilding Begins To Revive

Although the Irish shipyards have been by no means idle, they have not been working in the way that made them famous before the war. It is an excellent sign that Messrs. Harland and Wolff have produced another of their famous leviathans, and the smaller firm of Workman and Clark have just supplied the New Orleans Standard Fruit and Steamship Company with a finely modelled vessel.

The Minnetonka, which Harland and Wolff, Ltd., have built for the Atlantic Transport Company, Ltd., is a sister ship to the Minnewaska, and these two vessels are claimed to be the largest and most modern vessels sailing from the Thames.

Both are vessels of about 21,400 tons, and the accommodations (first class passengers only are carried) are unusually spacious and luxurious, and embrace all the most modern conveniences.

The Atlantida, which is the vessel built by Workman and Clark and Co., has been built to Lloyd's highest class. She has a length of 365 feet with a beam of 50 feet. She is arranged with three between decks, with holds forward and after for the carriage of bananas, and in addition has accommodation for 68 first class passengers. This is the first noteworthy effort made by either of these firms since Harland and Wolff, Ltd. produced the Brittanic just before the war.

Revival Of An Ancient Festival

The Tailteann Festival, which made Ireland famous in days gone by, is to be revived in Dublin this August, and with the object of fostering interest in the proceedings a delegation from Dublin addressed a meeting in the Ulster Hall, Belfast.

The festival is of great historical interest, and in addition to the games, the higher arts, music, painting, etc., are included. It is expected that the festival will attract many visitors to the country.

Sir John Irwin of the Dublin Industrial Association said he would like to disabuse the mind of anyone who entertained the idea that they had any ulterior object in endeavoring to obtain the support of the people of Ulster. It was one of those movements which he was pleased to say had been carried on by men of every shade of religious and political thought in the South of Ireland, in the most harmonious and brotherly manner.

At the close of the meeting it was decided to form an Ulster Council to foster interest in the games. It is pleasing to find a note of harmony even in so small a matter, the two parties who are, alas, too often discordent.

Paris Awaits Royal Heir Of Ethiopia

Paris, May 10.—The French, who adore color, are gloating in advance over the blaze of Oriental splendor which they expect burst over them with the arrival of the "Black Prince" of Abyssinia, the Ras Tafari, Regent and heir apparent to the Ethiopian throne.

Possibly some of the pomp and pageantry of the present monarch's ancestres, the Queen of Sheba, may be lacking in Tafari's modern suite and their accountrements. Nevertheless, according to all accounts, the dusky potentate intends to live up to all the best traditions of Eastern magnificence during his sojourn in the French capital.

Apart from the curiosity evoked by the exotic character of the Ethiopian mission, keen interest is felt in the visit of the Prince because he represents probably the oldest reigning Christian dynasty. Ethiopia was Christianised in the third century. One of the last descendants of the Queen of Sheba to visit France was the Ethiopian Prince who came to the court of Lou's XI, in the fifteenth century.

Memoirs of the epoch state that he was made such a fuss of by the French nobility that he came to an untimely end through overindulgence and never saw his own country again. His successes with the fair sex especially are handed down as legends.

The Ras Tafari and four of the satellites who accompany him as leaders of the mission are likely to be somewhat more serious than the frivolous ancestor for their aims are essentially political. The Ras is particularly eager to establish more friendly relations with European countries, and he counts on their aid to support and hasten the remarkable period of development upon which Abyssinia has entered.

The composition of his mission is of unusual significance. Its four leaders represent the four forces of the nation which have been consistently working against each other for years within the Ethiopian empire, as well as against the domination of the royal house of Shoa. One member of the mission, the Ras Hailu, the ruler of Cojjam, is himself a King's son. Two of the others are hereditary leaders of North Ethiopia.

On the eve of his departure the Ras was skillful enough to modify Abyssinia's legislation so as to strengthen the anti-slavery laws, and thus avoid awkward criticism during his European tour.

Many Emigrate From Slovakia

Prague, May 9.—In the course of the past year 82,145 persons have emigrated from Czecho-Slovakia, as against 39,429 the previous year. Three-quarters of these are Czecho-Slovaks, of whom, again, the great majority are Slovaks (the Government, to the annoyance of the Slovak autonomists, makes no distinction in its official returns between the two races).

Baldwin Prepares For Test At Polls

Former Premier Launches Out On Another Speaking Campaign

(From Our Own Correspondent)

London, May 5.—Mr. Stanley Baldwin, who it is claimed, has re-established the unity of the Conservative and Unionist Party, has launched out on a speech-making campaign which Lord Curzon has stated is to prepare for renewal of the conflict which cannot be long delayed. Evidently this means that the Conservatives envisage another general election in the near future and are getting ready for the fight.

In his address before the Primrose League the other day, Mr. Baldwin laid down the lines of Conservative and Unionist policy on broad national and imperial principles. Apart from the fact that Mr. Baldwin's speech outlines the platform of the Conservative Party, some of his remarks are of wide interest:

"It is under democracy, or not at all, that our Empire must live. The problem before Democracy today is: can the British democracy do what has never been done before? Can it preserve an empire and, preserving it, help it to increase?.

DOMINION TRADE

"If it appears to the Dominions that there is a reluctance on our part to enter into arrangements with them they will be attracted into other economic orbits, a course which would damage irretrievably the industries of our country. The most curious feature at the moment is that the Government, while rejecting the stretched-out hand of our own kith and kin, trying to take the hand of strangers from Moscow, whose trade with us has never been, and never can be, comparable with that of our Dominions.

"While guiding our Indian fellow-subjects along the hard path that we have trodden, which leads to self-government within the Empire, we will firmly resist any attempt to bring about any from of separation. The progressive grant of constitutional liberties must be in proportion to, but not in advance of, the loyalty and capacity of those whom it is intended to benefit.

"The Empire is one and indivisible. If you could picture it broken up, parts might live, parts would be hurled to destruction, and parts would starve.

"You must drive out that militaristic spirit which exists in industry and replace it by that spirit of good will towards their own fellow-countrymen which those who talk most of good will towards foreigners fail to preach. The brotherhood which Conservatives and Unionists feel towards every class will do more to realise the ideals of our people than that preaching of class hatred which provides the motive force in the constituencies returning the Labor Party."

BOUND TO COME

All are agreed that another general election is bound to come sooner or later, although Mr. Ramsay MacDonald would put it off for two or three years. But it is not at all certain that the Conservatives would be returned to power or even with the same representation as they now have in Parliament. Vast and fundamental changes are taking place in Britain's political and social structures and the Labor Party has handled the Government very well, while Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has surprised everybody by his cleverness and his intelligence,

Birth Of A New Social Existence

Mr. Henri Barbusse in the New Republic says: "Persisting in its present state of amorphous petrification, Europe can only die. The life of Europe is to be gained only by the birth of new forms of social existence. It will live only if the moribund elements of its society perish. I have always believed, I believe today, and I shall believe always in the virgin strength of the soil. Until now the people and the land have been laboring for others, for the few. Tomorrow they will begin to work for themselves, and no matter how the sceptics may smile, and the historians shower us with warning examples, the wheels of history will turn forward and he who refuses to accept the future will have to return to the past. The moment that witnesses the actual awakening of these sleeping and moribund old lands will signal the moment of resurrection for all mankind. And who can doubt that this stupendous change in our social system is bound to be followed by a new, incalculable harvest in the fields of art, culture and technical progress? The abolition of oppression, the straightening of Europe's crooked justice and crooked conscience, can only yield the very best of results.

NATIONS, TOO, GROW OLD

"It is a strange phenomenon: peoples and nations grow old, the same as individuals. It is as if their cumulative vitality and her collective heat of life were to expire on some sad day. No civilisation has yet existed forever. And it is possible that the Egyptian civilisation of which we, children of the twentieth century, speak as of something infinitely remote and antiquated, lasted longest and seemed destined to be eternal in the eyes of its contemporaries. In any event, when we compare the extent of our own civilisation with that of Egypt, our years seem but days; in Egypt they had thousands of years to boast of, while we can hardly reach even the first unit of four figures. World dominion in the domain of the spirit, the same as in the domain of physical power, was passed on from one civilisation to another, and each joyous ascent was accomplished at the price of a sad descent.

"It has fallen to our lot to become the witnesses and contemporaries of the great European weariness, the great European eclipse. Up to our own days, for a period of about a thousand years, England exercised her world dominion. Now, however, the bottom is commencing to slip from under the feet of clay of this insular giant. The future undoubtedly belongs to the nations who are still novices upon the world stage. Such debutantes, both because of their youthfulness and their political and social conditions, I am inclined to see in the United States, the Central and South American republics, Japan and Russia. It is patent even to the most superficial observer that the world pendulum has already commenced to swing in the direction of these great political entities. In this way, observing the world situation from the altitudes of a bird's-eye view and following the outlines of the great movements of history and of self-sufficient political moments, I cannot help partly agreeing with my American friends who speak of the decay of Europe."

Ireland Again Up In Limelight

One of the cleverest moves of Mr. Lloyd George, in the opinion of many, was the creation of the Irish Free State. Instead of British soldiers having to fight the Irish and to be shot at by snipers from almost every conceivable hiding place, the Irish were left to fight it out among themselves. It seems however that so long as there is life in the Irish there is a fight, especially against the Government. England is again drawn into the fight, this time in the question of the boundary between Ulster and the Irish Free State, which has never been definitely settled.

The Times says that in 1920 the United Kingdom made a double bargain with Northern Ireland and with what was then called Southern Ireland. The bargain with Southern Ireland was never carried into effect, and was cancelled by the treaty made with the Free State in December 1921. But the bargain with Northern Ireland was carried into effect. In order, for the sake of peace, to obtain it Northern Ireland made two heavy sacrifices. In the first place it ceased, for many purposes, to be an integral part of the United Kingdom, and became, for many purposes, a dependency. In the second place it surrendered three of the nine counties of which it claimed to consist. The United Kingdom was therefore absolutely bound, both in honor and in law, to maintain Northern Ireland in all its rights, and in the possession of all its territory.

The Act of 1922 contemplated the appointment of a Boundary Commission to fix the limits of the Northern Territory and the Free State. The commission was to consist of three members, one representing the British Government, on the Free State, and the third the Northern Government. In view of the failure to agree, the Free State Government has pressed for the constitution of the commission; the British Government, through the Colonial Secretary, has announced that Article 12 is to be put in force; Sir James Craig, representing the Northern Government, has flatly declined to appoint a member of the commission. The deadlock is therefore complete, and if Ulster persists in her refusal it can only be broken by an amending act, appointing a commissioner to represent the Northern Territory, since the Northern Territory will not nominate its own representative.

Find Americans Are Likeable

"We are forced to an admission," says the Daily Express. "The English have an incurable liking for Americans. One realises that anew each summer when the annual contingent begins to arrive. It is a sad admission for certain Die-Hards who still boil at the thought of the Boston tea party, but this generation genuinely likes its overseas cousins. In their own language we 'are glad to know them,' and as they no longer sing about their maternal progenitor in Dixie there is no reason why 1924 should not further cement the good-natured tolerance of each other's virtues."

A correspondent in the same paper writes: "I have been very much impressed in the last few weeks by the amazing smartness of the elderly American woman. She seems to have a flair for knowing exactly what suits her type. There is a trimness and a neatness about her whole appearance which, to my mind, is lamentably lacking in English women of the same age. The latter either try to keep young, usually with disastrous effect, or allow their clothes and themselves to fade away into dull insignificance. Now that the American women are over here, some of our own women might, with advantage, study their dress and deportment."

Stephen Graham in his "In Quest of El Dorado," says: "America has a 100 million educated population; Russia is smashed with her whole nation down on a gipsy level of culture; Germany nears the condition of Russia; Britain marks time. Alone America goes on." And the Evening Standard has remarked that the United States dollar seems to have taken the place of Esperanto as the universal language!

After all, the fact that it is now being generally admitted that all peoples have more or less in common and a genuine effort is being made to tolerate each other's virtues, is a further bright hope for the future. In particular, the effort to further Anglo-American friendship is the best guarantee for the peace of the world and certainly will contribute most to the success of democracy.

Byzantine Cross Won By Italian Church

Glasgow.—Sheriff Principal Mackenzie has refused an application by an Italian named Attilio Franchi against the decision to hand over to the parish priest of the Roman Catholic Church in Borgocollefegato, South Italy, a Byzantine Cross which formerly belonged to that church.

The cross, which is computed to be worth a quarter of a million, was found three years ago in the possession of an Italian ice cream salesman in Glasgow. Franchi contended that he found the cross in the ruins of a family castle after the Messina earthquake.

stretched as to fit almost any event. But when one comes across the prophecy that in April of this year a well-known German industrialist will die, the German sceptic gets a rude shock, for verily this can be no other than Stinnes!

Bremen's Easter Fashion Parade

The average foreigner taking a walk through Bermen on Easter Sunday would certainly have refused to believe in the newspaper accounts of the gravity of the present economic state of Germany. He would be more inclined to dub their authors 'unmitigated croakers'. The streets were as usual thronged with a crowd almost every member of which had on something new. New costumes, new suits, new hats and new boots and shoes met one at every turn. Where is German poverty? A newspaper seller gave the answer. "Poverty hides itself", he said. "These, he said, pointing to the gaily clad crowd," are only certain classes of the poeple, you don't see the poor here. I could tell you tales enough about them", he added.

German Servants Go To Holland

Our result of the amputation suffered by Germany, has been to drive an increasing number of her population to seek a living in somebody else's country. In the early days after the War thousands of Germans of all classes went to Holland. It was near, it was prosperous; later on as the inflation tide rose in Germany the lure of the gulden became irresistible. The tide has turned since then. Holland wrestling with the problem of unemployment now bars her gates to the stranger. Henceforth a foreigner will only be permitted to work there when no Dutchman or Dutchwoman is forthcoming. Holland is ready however, to make an exception in favor of German servants, 60,000 of whom were said to be in Holland a few months ago. It is notorious that during inflation many German servants left good posts in this part of the country to profit by he exchange in Holland. Those engaged to be married earned their trousseaux in Holland. Others earned there the means of supporting aged parents. From the plaints of the German housewives it was clear that the elite of the servant class had gone to Holland and that only an inferior brand of the article had been left here. Dutch housewives were delighted. The perennial and awful servant problem seemed solved. Alas! like so many experiences in human life it was too good to be true. With the stabilisation of the mark the gulden lost its lure and the Maries and Katchens hastened back to their own country where they are now in excess of the demand for them.

A Crucible For German Students

The German student, on the other hand, in the days of inflation turned his eyes to America. His idea was to work there, heap up a little store of dollars, return to his native land and continue his studies. Stabilisation and the American measures against the flooding of the country by immigrants have checked the movement. Dr. Paul Rohrbach who went to America to help the students, writing from New York, gives some interesting details as to how individual students have fared in carrying out their aim. To begin with the young men have stuck at nothing. They have accepted any job that offered and—on this Dr. Rohrbach lays special stress—they have practised the most rigid economy. In this way an unskilled worker may earn from 20 to 25 dollars a week in New York. Of that it is possible to live on $12 and one should be able to save at least $10. There are next to no openings in shop or office save by a lucky chance. Pre-requisites for such an ordeal are physical health and strength, great powers of endurance and adaptability to circumstances. Lighthearted natures with the capacity of making friends get along swimmingly, earning $40, $50 or even $80 a week. Such are ready of course to take any job going, acting as "blackleg" one day and as a seller of ice in the streets the next.

February, and 9 of 36,917 tons in January. For the four months the Clyde output consisted of 59 vessels of 139,856 tons, as compared with 35 vessels of 119,935 tons in the corresponding period There was therefore an increase of 24 vessels and 19,921 tons on last year, but a decrease of 9 vessels and 97,305 tons as compared with the highest figures for the period.

Strong Socialist For Paisley

Mr. Rosslyn Mitchell, who, it will be remembered, put up a very strong fight against the late Mr. Bonar Law in the election in the Central Division of Glasgow in 1922, will, it is expected be the labor candidate for Paisley at the next election. At a meeting of all sections of the Labor movement in Paisley it was agreed to invite him to contest the seat and while he has not yet given his decision, it is understood that he is practically certain to accept the invitation.

Mr. Mitchell has acquired, and deservedly so, a high reputation as a Labor candidate. When he opposed Mr. Bonar Law who had been elected in 1918 with a majority of about 13,000, he succeeded in reducing his opponent's majority to 2514. Last year it was almost universally believed that he would capture the seat for his party but Sir William Alexander managed to defeat him by the narrow majority of 416 votes.

The appearance of Mr. Mitchell as a representative of a united Labor Party on Paisley, will undoubtedly give reason for grave concern in the minds of Mr. Asquith's supporters. When the Liberal leader first became member for Paisley at a bye election in 1920, he obtained a majority of 2800 over his Labor opponent, Mr. Biggar, and it was thought that Paisley, a traditional Liberal stronghold, had been unaffected by the general political drift to the left of recent years. It was therefore somewhat of a surprise for the local Liberals when the result of the 1922 election showed that their candidate had only succeeded in retaining his seat by the narrow margin of 316 votes. Last year, in spite of Conservative opposition, the schism in the Labor Party saved Mr. Asquith from any danger and he again retained his seat. It is recognised, however, that with a reunited party behind him, Mr. Rosslyn Mitchell will be a particularly dangerous opponent, especially in the event of Unionist opposition.

Haggis Still A Popular Dish

When Miss Bagley was saying her few kind words at the Musical Festival, now being held in the St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, as one of the adjudicators, she mentioned with evident triumph that although she was not qualified by nationality to pronounce on the rendering of "To a Haggis" of Burns, yet she had tasted it. I did not gather that the lady was prepared to repeat the experiment, and it may be that she regards the cheer which greeted the announcement as being very dearly bought.

How many of the large Scots audience who had gathered there to listen to the Doric have ever made a meal of the dish, I wonder? I expect the total might surprise Miss Bagley. While the cities may not know the dish it has certainly not lost its popularity among country folk who can appreciate its nourishing qualities. The story is told of the French wife of a Glasgow man that when she had shared her husband's life even to the extent of eating a spoonful or two one night, she solemnly offered up this grace after meat—"Thank the good Lord who has given me strength to partake of this nourishing supper."

in a heavenly place, the friends who have been sighing for your return cannot muster up energy to come to see you, or to explain why they did not come. The rule of the revolver has made Ireland a weary country for the first time. A few bold spirits try to keep up social life, but it all goes languidly.

Very few people now dress for dinner or the theatre in Dublin. It is quite surprising how dingy dressing may weigh upon the spirit. And yet I have seen looks of intense pleasure directed at a prettily dressed girl in the Dublin streets. Dublin is starved for brightness. That is why the dancing halls are crowded.

A dull utilitarian spirit seems to have crept over Irish public life. There are not even the delicious blunders of old. We used to be a race of orators. Anything duller than the Dail, even on an exciting occasion, cannot well be imagined. The Legislative Assembly would seem deliberately to have abjured the graces. I have attended several meetings of the Dail. Once, at one of the early meetings in the Mansion House, I heard oratory. It was from the lips of General Mulcahy. I have heard since quite notable pronouncements made by men who knew what they wanted to say and how to say it. Mr. Thomas Johnson, the leader of the Labor Party, is a very good speaker. He has elucated speech and is trained to public speaking.

I listened the other day in the Dail to five speakers in the Army discipline debate, a stirring enough subject one would say. They all dragged except one, who had the speech of the English public school and University. Mr. Johnson, and the little business-men's party of two or three, are competent speakers. The voices from the Ministerial benches reached me as something thin and inaudible. The Dail dresses as dingily as the rest of Dublin, and the gallery was to a man or woman dingily dressed. Is there a cloud over the Theatre of the Royal Dublin Society where the Dail sits, or does the Dail cast the cloud? Some of its members are merry enough outside, and if you want the Irish charm you find it in the attendants and the soldiers at the gates. Neither war nor revolution has not robbed them of their birthright.

But the solemn faces of the people in the gallery! There did not seem a possible smile among them. Democratic Dublin wears its hair en brosse and has enormous quantities of it, that is to say the men. Hair-cutting, I imagine has become a vanished industry in Dublin.

I can remember looking down from the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Commons on an assemblage which was mainly bald-headed. At the first meeting of the Dail which I attended in, I think, 1921, I was struck by the thick Republican heads of hair of the deputies—the Irish love a French word. The hair connoted the preponderance of youth among the new Irish. I wonder what a British sergeant-major would think of those heads.

I am sure the little Opposition will liven up the Dail. One who sits with the new Party, a quite important person, came a long way with us to show us the easiest way out. There was the charm and the manners.

You find them always among the people. The Irish can still be of the most gracious people in the world. But that is another story.

The chief sensation of the week is the arrival of another Bolshevik-indicting book by that daring and resourceful British secret service man, Captain Francis MacCullagh, whose adventures in Soviet Russia during the early days of the Revolution and since have been featured by every great newspaper and news agency. Captain MacCullagh now exposes "The Bolshevik Persecution of Christianity," detailing the attack on the old Russian Church, a part of which he witnessed; the founding of the Red Church; the relations of the Vatican and the Kremlin during and after the revolution; the Cieplak trial; the present position of the several Christian churches in Russia. There are fullsome appendices containing copies of original documents and decrees and through the book are scattered photographs of the important participants in the events related. Captain MacCullagh's previous book, "A Prisoner of the Reds" was for a season one of the liveliest sellers in America.

Following a straw vote among its readers on the most popular books of the century, the International Book Review of New York has now taken a poll of 100 representative booksellers throughout the United States on the same topic. So seldom has the bookseller's opinion been recorded and so excellent in his opportunity to judge of favorites that the following result of the poll is of real interest:

"Lord Jim", Joseph Conrad.
"Abraham Lincoln", Lord Charnwood.
"Kim", Rudyard Kipling.
"Jean Christophe", Romanine Rolland.
"The Outline of History", H. G. Wells.

"Moll Flanders", that delightful female rogue, whose non-conformist conscience led her into endless escapades, has been brought to life again in a new edition of the story published by Knopf, New York. "Moll" was Defoe's great character creation and it is doubtful that she has ever been surpassed in fiction or fact. The story is a monument to the author's genius and Shanghai readers sincerely interested in critical tips will obtain it without delay.

"The First Time in History," one of the week's arrivals, is Anna Louise Strong's impression of the first two years of the Russian dictatorship. Miss Strong is a well-known feature writer for American newspapers, has been in Russia for a considerable time, travelling widely for the Quaker Relief and the Hearst press and is intimately acquainted with all the leaders of the Russian government and with all the ramifications of Soviet administration. There is an introduction by Leon Trotsky which warns that the text is sympathetic to the Russian cause, a fact which is made more and more evident as the story proceeds. Taking Miss Strong's strong sympathies into account, however, there is fact in the volume which even persons of equally strong prejudices in the opposite direction will want to obtain and it is easily worth while.

Although Havelock Ellis has not previously been held out as philosopher he now offers his outlook upon this mad career in "The Dance of Life", Havelock Ellis has for many years been considered one of humanity's ODD persons because of his extremely bold and extremely different ideas upon questions of sex and personal freedom. His oddity has not been such as to arouse ridicule, however, chiefly because it has been so reasonable; on the contrary most readers have stopped to ponder and so many have made bold to act upon his urges that we are now in a fair way to making a new moral code altogether. In "The Dance of Life" he restates his already familiar moral postulates and challenges his puritanical critics with texts, reason and raillery. "Life is art" he asserts, nothing more, and beyond arriving at beauty it has no purpose or design. Ideally life should be a harmonious thing—a dance, a musical theme—though he does not predict this condition as immediately to be hoped for.

That there is a real remedy for most of the ills of flesh outside of the apothecary shop and the doctor's office and that mental and nervous disorders can easily be remedied is the contention of Prof. F. Matthias Alexander in a new book which he entitles "Constructive Conscious Control of the Individual". His proposal is not auto-suggestion but a resumption of the conscious control of all human activities. Prof. John Dewey of Columbia, well known in Shanghai through his residence here of two years ago and recognised as one of America's foremost philosophers and teachers, considers Mr. Alexander's thought extremely profound and practical and has written an excellent introduction to the volume.

"Husbands and Lovers", by Franz Molnar, author of "Liliom" is a collection of nineteen sparkling dialogues sketching Viennese life. The writing bears all the familiar marks of the Molnar skill and the stories are audaciously witty and titillating. The translation into English is made by Benjamin Glazier.

"The Homemaker" by Dorothy Canfield; "Jimmy the Joyous", by Cornelia Stratton Parker, author of "The American Idyll;" and "Gold" by Jacob Wasserman who wrote that masterful novel "The World's Illusion" are the newest releases of Harcourt Brace and Co., New York. All three titles may now be had in Shanghai.

Christopher Morley has collected a new volume of "Modern Essays", which has just come to Shanghai. There are more than a score of leading authors represented on the list, among them Stephen Leacock, Henry Nevinson, Sherwood Anderson, Willa Cather, W. H. Hudson, and G. Lowes Dickinson.

"Gow's Guide to Shanghai", published here and just released for sale, will be welcome not only to tourists and travellers, but to residents who have not yet begun to get acquainted with the "Model Settlement" or the reasons which make it "Model". The guide is provided not only with careful descriptions and many photographs, but with a generous number of maps and for the commercial representative there is fullsome and useful business information.

A chain of islands just off the Carolina coast, still as wild as when the white man first came to America, rich in game and generally unknown even to residents of the East Coast, is the happy hunting ground of which Archibald Rutledge writes in "Days Off Dixie", one of the Doubleday Page new books. He tells of hunting deer by moonlight, shooting ducks at dawn and stalking grouse through the autumn fields that lie inland, though he has moments which are not destructive and display really poetic descriptive qualities.

MIRAGE

By Edgar Lee Masters

(Boni And Liverght)

In our day, when the virtues have been identified as inhibitions and when the first duty toward complexes is to release them from the sphere of the subconscious into the realm of action, it seems time wasted to consider "Mirage" on grounds of taste or morality. Taste is a specious pretext, behind which all sorts of prejudices can lurk. Morality may answer that its ends are quite effectively subserved when the palms and wells have taken flight and we are left with the sands of a very real desert under our feet and the water supply dangerously low. There are sure to be readers upon whose consciousness the utter frankness of Lee Master's new novel will register the vulgar sensation known as "shock" It is equally sure that among them will not be many critics whose word carries literary weight. Others, while doing full justice to the art with which the vision is presented, will feel that the mirage is really a "Fata Morgana" and that its very inversion saves us from any mistaken notions as to its substantiality. Even the new art and the new literture have not habituated us to taking our moral lessons upside down.

"Skeeters" Kirby, the pilgrim in Venusbery through whose reactions the story is presented and whom we have met before, is a sombre sensualist who ransoms his failings by a sort of perverted idealism and a very real faculty for suffering. He loves in turn a dissipated and worthless young widow—a sort of Emma Bovary whom the will of a doting and impotent husband has put on Easy Street, a girl secretary whom he summons to New York to fill a sentimental hiatus, a Swedish divorcee met in a train on her way to Europe, and the wife of a philosophic artist to whom her husband accords full liberty of action, repaying her public utterances on the arrangement by kissing her hand and owning her a "wonderful girl." Between the various affairs there are interludes, long or short, and Mr. Masters fills them, after the manner of George Moore, with detached and impersonal speculations on the destiny of men and women in love. There are passages full of the very cadences of the Irish writer.

Mr. Masters shares Moore's obsession over the inspiration of the New Testament. Six pages are devoted to a parlor car discussion on this subject from the agnostic point of view. If is true that there is an excuse for "Skeeters'" anti-dogmatic bitterness. Not only is he on his way to a cruel mistress, but an attractive woman in whom his instinct scents a new sentimental adventure seems "unconscious of his interest."

"Mirage" is a strange and disquieting novel. If its studied naivete of narrative, as with so many of the new writers, sometimes degenerates into baldness, it is full of the precious quality of glamour. But its art is morbidezza. Its world is a world seen through the tired eyes of voluptuaries sated with indulgence, to whom the bracing effect of even occasional self-denial never suggests itself. Sadness pervades it. It is full of the headaches and heartaches that follow abuse of the sensibilities. At times a perfect jeremiad of selfpity exhales from its pages—laments that time is fleeting, powers failing, that beings whom men and women would keep to serve their happiness pass on to seek their own, laments of the heart at its own treacheries. A demon seems to drive these strange lovers into one another's arms, and when they cling together for a while it is less from loyalty of habit than from a desire to allay by mutual support the pressure of an existence to which the'r own passions contribute, out which fills them with angu'sh and vertigo. None of them is willing to accord traditional value to truth or honesty. Becky Norris lies with fine facility to all her lovers. Minette Shaw, her teammate in sentimental foursomes, is deceiving a husband in Europe. Kirby covers a temporary liaison with a literary alias and weaves an entire fabric of deceit to introduce a prospective mistress into his mother's home. Lawyers cheat and blackmail. A clergyman averts an "unpleasant" charge by a counter threat to prosecute for abuse of the mails. Spoon River has risen and stalks Fifth Avenue.

It is trite and banal and not criticism at all to suggest that it is a pity Mr. Masters's talent is not employed on sweeter themes. Themes will attract the clever and the more than clever in proportion to the value each generation accords them. Today it is idle to deny that Eros holds the field. Those who refuse to recognize him as a first value must get what comfort they can from tough old Emerson. It is not the gods, but the half-gods, whose oasis is "Mirage."

THE WRATH TO COME

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

Little, Brown And Company

That most industrious of story-tellers, E. Phillips Oppenheim, has presumably exhausted contemporary plot possibilities and has chosen to dip into the future in his new novel. "The Wrath to Come." He looks ahead in this story to the year 1950, and finds there abundant material for a quick-paced yarn of international intrigue. For after all the intervening time has not made a very marked difference. It is to all intents and purposes the same old world. True, England has on the throne a King Edward VIII., who in his youth seemed to have been a debonair and democratic young Prince with a penchant for horseback riding. True, prohibition in the United States has passed, except in the memory of the older generation, who recall the dark days of the early 1920's. But many of the old familiar things remain. The German mind, for instance, still shows itself incapable of fathoming Anglo-Saxon psychology, and the United States still remains without the League.

As the mainspring for his plot Mr. Oppenheim seizes on Germany's deep-rooted desire for revenge. That nation has again waxed fat, and again desires to kick. Of course, the Limitations of Armaments treaty looms as a hindrance, but where there's a will there's a way. She falls back on those old arts in which she trusted at an earlier date—evasion and propaganda. The author has used his recent visit to America to good effect, and even makes his account of the rather melodramatic machinations of German agents in America seem plausible. But Germany does not plan to strike alone. Japan, ever fretful of restrictions placed by the United States on Oriental immigration, turns jealous eyes toward California, and the new Russia also decides to pin its faith on the sword rather than the plowshare. Despite such contrary currents, the League of Nations, called throughout the story the "Pact of Nations," continues to function, and becomes in the end the dominant force in keeping the world at peace.

Against this disturbed background Mr. Oppenheim tells his story. As his hero he presents Grant Slattery, an American, young but not too young. Slattery has Harvard and a few important years in the Diplomatic Service all in the backround. In the foreground loom the family millions represented in concrete form by one of the most perfectly appointed yachts on the seven seas. To the casual eye the wealthy, goodlooking Mr. Slattery is nothing but an idler at large. In reality, however, and as a very accomplished amateur, he dabbles in international politics as the chief eyes and ears and brain of the Secret Service. His settled conviction that the welfare of the world's future rests in the closest Anglo-American understanding and co-operation bring him in daily contact with the British Premier, Lord Yeovil—fifty years hence one hears no talk of a Labor Government. For reasons of romance and as the mouthpiece of much diverting chatter Mr. Oppenheim sees to it that the noble lord is the father of a clever and attractive daughter. Another frequently on the scene is the Princess von Diss, formerly of Washington, who had the bad taste some years before our story opens to jilt the engaging Mr. Slattery and run off with a German princeling. In the interval she has acquired many made-in-Germany tricks and needs watching throughout the book. Not to be ignored is the amorous Japanese, Count Istash. He had a lady friend, Mlle. Cleo, whose courtesy title is that of danseuse at a Monte Carlo cabaret. He had also the unfortunate habit for a diplomat of talking in his sleep.

All this merely indicates some of the details which in Mr. Oppenheim's practiced hands become the deftly contrived complications that make "The Wrath to Come" thoroughly exciting reading. What if it does at times outmove the "movies"? What if Slattery's abduction of the diplomat whose vote was to blackball the League's great invitation to America savors of most mellow melodrama? Anything might happen, and at any place, thirty and forty and fifty years on. Mr. Oppenheim is not one to ignore the legitimate claims of narrative, and knows that a good story when it gets well into its swing should, like the time and tide, wait for no man. True, we have no lengthy pauses here while analysis and psychology get their innings, but his people are no mere puppets. The German master mind, Cornelius Blunn, for example, stands out as an admirable characterisation. And all have the good sense to talk as their stations in life and their varying intelligence would indicate. "The Wrath to Come" has all the thrills that a reader of plot novels could desire, and besides, has the added advantage of being a workmanlike and well-written yarn.

SUFFERED AGONY WITH SCIATICA

"If It Were Not For Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, I Do Not Think I Would Ever Have Walked Again"

"No one will ever know the misery I was in and how I suffered from sciatic rheumatism," says Mrs. Thomas Dunlop, an American lady residing at No. 10 Edison Avenue, Syracuse, N. Y. "For years I suffered on and off from this disease. Sharp pains that came without warning in my left hip and ran down my thigh were almost unbearable. My left hand became so swollen and sore that I could not use it.

"For four months I was confined to my bed and could not even turn over without help. I was very nervous and in agony night and day.

"I heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through a doctor who had used them in a case very much like mine. After using them for a while I was able to get round. The cutting pains and swelling slowly disappeared and I could attend to my household duties. If it were not for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I do not think I would ever have walked again and I always have a good word for the remedy."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People can be purchased at your druggist's, or will be sent, post free, 1 bottle for $1.50, 6 bottles $8.00, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 60 Kiangse Road, Shanghai. Write for the free booklet, "Diseases of the Nervous System," which contains a special chapter on the treatment of sciatica.

For Summer

TRANSPARENT CHIFFON is the smart fabric for the Summer afternoon frock. Sprawling patterns of colorful fruit and flowers tint the delicate fabric. Satin-back crepe is reversed to form its own trimming when made up into a gown. The dull surface is used for half the frock, and the brilliant side of the crepe is employed in charming contrast. We shall soon see the return of sleeves, if present signs mean anything. Many of the new frocks for semi-formal wear have tiny strips of transparent material as a forerunner of the sleeve to follow.

Gowns by J. Sills.

A GORGEOUS ARRAY of colorful frocks has been ushered in for Summer. Printed chiffons are in the lead; they follow the vogue of those printed fabrics from which the early Spring costumes are fashioned

Upon the sheer transparency of chiffon are employed the delicate hues which are printed on its surface in a pattern of fruit and flowers. There is a string tie of silk and a tiny guimpe from which the tie takes its line so gracefully.

You will notice that there is no hem to mar the beauty of this frock. The edges are bound with bright silk ribbon

Color for Summer styles penetrates the mode of every hour. An evening gown of satin-back crepe reverses its material for an effective trimming. The bodice of this gown shows the brilliant side of the crepe; while the skirt and its train, which is simply a continuation of the hip drapery, is fashioned to show the reverse side of the silk crepe.

Bands of bead embroidery are used at the neckline and girdle. A slender silk tassel is suspended from the drapery.

Following the popularity of transparent chiffons, lace continues to be fashionable A delightful Summer gown for the dinner or dance offers sheer lace in a new style.

There are short sleeves, a forerunner of the return of this mode. Waistlines seem to be a matter of individual taste these days, so this lace frock displays an unusually low line for its flower girdle.

Bead-embroidered scallops create a note of dainty trimming on an otherwise simple dance frock The ruffled yoke follows the same line, in keeping with the narrow ruffles which are applied to the skirt.

For street wear, the tunic frock is adorned with many pin tucks stitched in gold thread A slender band of gold brocade extends down the front of this frock, as a continuation of the narrow collar.

Paris No Leader In Men's Fashions

Quite Content To Set Style Pace For Women Only

Paris, May 10.—There is a report that Paris, not satisfied with being the center of fashion for women, is making a strenuous effort to hold the same position for men. But those who should know are skeptical. They insist that the American man will always decide, for true comfort and swank, on clothes bearing the London label. Paris may give him a few details of dress, like handkerchiefs, cuff links, studs, silk socks and cravats, or may even go further and make these details harmonise in artistic unity, but apart from that she holds no claim to authority over masculine attire.

Time was, indeed, when this was different, when the Beau Brummel of the European Continent vied with his lady as to which could more closely simulate the dress worn at the French Court. That was the time of silk and satin coats and velvet breeches, of laces and embroideries, of wigs and perfumes. Color and design then played as great a part in the life of the male as they did in that of his love—or loves. It was then that the French capital established its position as arbiter of fashion for the world.

That position has been maintained, as far as women are concerned, in spite of changing thought and forms of government. But, to give the Shavian explanation, man soon discovered that he was the pursued and not the pursuer, and, therefore, doffed his gay plumage. Desiring to escape, to be inconspicious, to be no different from other males, he came upon the idea of drab clothes.

It was one of the earliest efforts in camouflage. No longer could a man be recognised by the perfume he used, by the silk of his breeches, by the cut of his collar. He became merely a male, looking like every other male. That made the chase harder for the female, of course. By very virtue of this, it was incumbent upon her to continue in the ravishing creations of a French designer. That is an important reason why Paris today still holds sway in the field of women's clothes.

Why should Paris be the arbiter of fashion? Why not London? Rome? Berlin? This question was asked of M. Gaston Liebert, Director of the French Bureau of Information and former member of the French diplomatic service. M. Liebert is a Frenchman from toes to fingertips. He looks the French diplomat.

"You ask," he said, "why Paris should have gained her supremacy in fashion and why she should have kept it. France has a very old civilisation. From the beginning she developed an interest in things artistic. There is something in the nature of the Frenchman which demands beautiful expression. The French worker has never been a laborer; he has been an artisan, a man who puts all of his soul in the task before him, no matter how lowly it may be. That was as true in the twelfth century as in the twentieth.

"Greece and its treasure, the Orient and its art traditions, Rome and whatever it had to contribute became the art heritage of the Frenchman. Wars, crusades, pilgrimages, religious and otherwise, played no small part in this development of France. The Frenchman—and in the old times this meant the Norman, the Briton, the man from Touraine, or any other province that made up the country—was imbued with two things—a love of beauty and a love of his soil. Wherever he went he saturated himself with the art expression he saw, and he made it part of himself with the unconscious thought in mind that some day he would give it to his country. He did. Civilisation in France meant art in France. In other countries it meant supremacy in law, in science, in philosophy.

"It was natural that art should find its expression in clothes as well as painting, sculpture and architecture. Not the least contributing cause of this lay in the fact that France was one of the first European countries to have a strongly autocratic government. Where there was a King and a central court there was pomp, color, show. While other countries were still working under a feudal system that separated one part of the country from the next, France was governed by a King. Wherever the King was, there you found the masterpieces of French fashion. The central court at which gathered all the mighty of the land became naturally an inspiration to the French designer of clothes. Just as the nobles vied for favor in the eyes of the ruler, designers vied for favor in the eyes of the nobles.

"In the hall of splendor, of tapestries, hangings and crystal chandeliers, that man or woman who most stood forth in the surrounding was naturally the most envied. Here, a man's position or wealth was indicated by the clothes he wore and those in which he decked his mistress. That was the age of romance, and romance meant adventure and change in clothes as well as in living. "It wasn't Paris this was primarily the centre of fashion then. It was wherever the royal court was held, whether in Blois, Amboise, Fontainebleau, Versailles or Paris. Along with the court went the couturiers, the dressmakers, the designers, vying with one another in creating masterpieces of silks and satins, of velvets, cloths and laces that would bring them favor from their patrons.

"The fame of the splendor of the court spread. Envoys and ambassadors as well as voyagers were impressed by what they saw and strove to excel in the never-ending, always changing promenade of fashion. England, Italy, Germany, Spain, all the surrounding countries, in fact, soon looked upon the French Court as the arbiter of fashion. Those that never came to France insisted that their dressmakers at home should give them clothes that bore the mark of Paris or Versailles. Thus was started the pilgrimage of foreign designers to the fountain head of beauty.

"Peter the Great of Russia was among the first to acknowledge that the Frenchman could tell him much when it came to matters of dress. It was he who made Russia an important market for Paris clothes and their appurtenances. What was true of Russia was true of London, of Berlin, of Austria. 'Made in Paris' bore with it a charm greater, if possible, than it bears today. Paris was established as the centre of beautiful clothes as well as the centre of wit, of life, of good living.

"Because of this many of the infant industries of the country were encouraged to grow and expand. Provence, which was a favorable country for the raising of silk worms, flourished and became prosperous. Lyons throve as a hardy centre of silk weavers. Even today the finest silk in the world is made there. America manufactures much silk, but I have talked to your merchants and the best of them will admit that American silk cannot hold its own with silk made today in Lyons. The workers there have been silk weavers for centuries. They know the work and love it.

"In Northern France, at Sedan and Rheims, was established the cloth-making industry. All the fine velvets, the soft broadcloths, the artistic pile materials which it is a joy to touch, were made and still are made there. Throughout the country the French people acquired that preoccupation of art which then as well as today made France the center of things beautiful.

"Industries developed then are going on today. They have expanded, taken in more of the world as their customers. The people have continued in the old way, giving the best of themselves to the task of creation. Beauty pays in France. The Frenchman lives on it. His wages may not be so lavish as the American's, but the life he lives is vastly more satisfying. This preoccupation of art which is ingrown in him manifests itself in a score of ways. It shows in his cooking, it shows in his eating, in his desire to make his meal an artistic and satisfying rite, to have the correct wine with each dish; or, not affording that, to have some beverage that will bring out the flavor of his food.

"You ask why all this didn't happen to London or Berlin or Rome? answer to that can only be that the English, the Germans and the Italians didn't offer that which the French did. The answer is that today the world comes to Paris for style and fashion. An American woman won't go to Italy to get her clothes, nor will she go to Berlin. She may buy sport clothes in London, but even there she finds that the Parisian can do more with material than can the Englishwoman. It's a matter of temperament and genius, and I am bold enough to say that the Frenchman has both.

"When it comes to men's clothes, we are willing to give the palm to England. Paris has no desire to vie for favor in sack coats and baggy breeches. But the matter of supremacy for the beautiful we reserve for ourselves. Men's clothes today are not beautiful. They are utilitarian. A man likes to feel free and comfortable. He likes to wear material that is lasting. England excels in that. Her tweeds and homespuns, products as English as the people, give good service. Beauty is not asked of them.

"With the growth of sports in popularity among all classes of people the popularity of English clothes for men should, if anything, increase. The English tailor is a wizard at putting a man into clothes that will make it easier for him to indulge in exercise. Today American styles for men show the English influence to a great extent.

"There is one possible place where the French tailor for men might excel the English. That is in the making of evening clothes and frock coats. Yet even there an English label is still recognised the world over. They may use fine French cloth for the making of a suit for formal wear, but the cut is not essentially French. Men's clothes do not allow very much leeway for individual expression. That is a handicap to a French worker."

AN ATTRACTIVE SUMMER FROCK

One of the new Parisian models for summer wear is a dress of plaid silk voile from Cheruit. It is trimmed with double ribbon streamers in green and rust shades, the colors of the voile. A most attractive neck finish lends added charm.

Novel Designs Are Displayed In Trimmings

Paris, April 15.—A newly designed trimming to be had by the yard is in medallions of conventional designs, delicately embroidered in colored floss on white crepe lisse. Still more fancy designs are handpainted on the sheer white, in ovals, squares or round motifs, to be cut apart and appliqued on fancy overblouses or frocks, and even on the light taffeta or crepe hats.

Very effective machine-made band trimming is done in imitation of cross stitch and crewels that are much liked for the cotton frocks and blouses. Among the novelties in the department of trimming is a large assortment of transferred designs in stitching, petit point, braiding and ribbon embroidery, emphasising the fact that this is a trimming season.

Prune Trees Are Saved By Chicks

Henry Kleinsorge, an orchardist in Sutter County, Cal., raises chickens and prunes. When the frosts came Kleinsorge discovered that while the buds were destroyed on the prune trees in which there were no hens roosting, the crop on the trees in which they did roost was only partially damaged. He attributes this phenomenon to the warmth of the hens' bodies, which he believes appreciably raised the temperature among the branches.

BEAUTY PRIZE WINNER'S CONFESSION

Miss Alice Cordrey, the winner of a recent beauty competition, who was awarded the First Prize by an overwhelming majority of votes, confided to a London journalist the secret of her success.

"My complexion did it," she declared, with a merry laugh. "Striking features and fine eyes are an accident of birth—or a gift from the Gods, whichever way you like to put it—but nowadays life under modern conditions requires a woman to take especial care of her skin. I have used mercolised wax for mine for years past, and I find it unsurpassed for giving a soft, delicate freshness to the complexion that keeps one young and beautiful."

"It is the only thing I know," Miss Cordrey said, "that will maintain this unique action on the skin indefinitely. Most face creams seem to lose their effect after very little use, and many only clog the pores of the skin and leave the face sickly and pale."

Mercolised wax is sold by most chemists, and can be applied at night and washed off in the morning, when it takes the blemishes and roughness with it, leaving the skin soft and delicate as a child's. After a few applications the outer scarf surface of the skin disappears entirely, yet it is extremely pleasant to use, and performs this transformation almost imperceptibly. The beneficial results, however, are most perceptible and permanent!

No End To Demand For Necklaces

New York, May 3.—A sense of humor is needed to appreciate the quantity and variety of necklaces and other baubles that are now displayed in every place where things pertaining to women's dress are sold. They resemble most amusingly the button strings of our early childhood days and the marbles that in the Springtime add so much to the happiness of little boys.

Millions of strings of beads, some of crystal and semi-precious in character, but most of them just glass, add to the decorative layout of the shops, big and little, and are worn without apology for their cheapness by women of taste and fashion.

Of course there are people of affluence who resist the temptation to deck themselves after the manner of Indian squaws, and who follow the fashion by wearing strings of fine stones and beads made of the genuine article; and some decline to wear anything in the way of a necklace other than their pearls or the other precious [illegible] in their jewelry for evening dress.

"The astonishing thing about some of the latest styles in necklaces, in both the long strings and the choker, is the size and weight of the beads. The marvel is that any but an Amazon is able to wear them and smile. "Beads" the size of a robin's eggs or a prize "chiney" in the game of marbles, made of rock crystal, clear, or of one of the many pretty colored imitations, weigh like a chain of rocks and would be burdensome if they were not the last word in the mode.

New and quite charming are necklaces of tortoise shell. The strings are very long, and the beads are both round and oblong. The round ones suggest, again, the "agates" in the marble game, and the oblong beads are large, some quite the size of a pigeon's egg. These shell necklaces are, of course, light, and they are for the moment exceedingly fashionable. To be worn on them are pendents of tortoise shell, large hollow oblongs, delicately carved.

A Squirrel With A Sweet Tooth

At Epping, N. H., Mrs. Blair and her pupils noted an interesting bit of natural history. A squirrel was seen laying in a sugar maple near the schoolhouse, and a closer inspection revealed the fact that he had gnawed the under side of a limb and, hanging on by his four feet, was sucking the sap that oozed out. He repeated this performance several times.

Vacuum Cleaner For Army Mules

The Cavalry Board of the United States army has recommended a vacuum cleaner for the grooming of horses and mules. The decision was based on the time saved rather than on consideration of safety. It now takes twenty-four minutes to groom a horse with brush and comb, and the time will be cut down to ten minutes by the vacuum cleaner.

Valuable Sapphires Are Found In Field

Colombo (By United Press).—Magnificent sapphires — dozens of them, some weighing half a pound and worth nearly $15,000 each in the rough—are reported to have been found in a rice field at Pelmadulla, 50 miles from Colombo. Owners of the field are said to have already received over half a million rupees in selling the rough gems. Colombo jewellers are known to have heavily overloaded their stocks lately as a result of the "strike," yet some sceptical folk say Sapphira herself would have to report the find before they would believe in it.

Lace Hats Favored For Afternoon

Lace has been borrowed by millinery designers from the afternoon and evening frocks of the season. Now the sheer patterned fabric is made into charming hats to wear at the man-jongg or bridge party. Evening hats for restaurant wear are also shown with lace as their trimming. And many of these hats are fashioned of all-over lace.

One lovely model recently noted at a mah-jongg fete boasted a crown of fine henna-clored milan. The brim of the hat was made of cocoa color lace stretched over supports of fine silk wire. Directoire in effect, the back of the brim flared upward and gradually sloped toward the sides with a line of colorful posies.

Black lace is very popular in millinery. It is made, for example, into a lovely little afternoon bonnet, reminiscent of the cloche, with a sung crown of black satin; brim covered in black satin with bands of silver ribbon stitched in concentric rows on the under side. A length of black Spanish lace, wide enough to allow the scalloped edge to form a short veil, is draped over the crown and tied at one side. The lace floats off into two streamers, one longer than the other.

Dyed lace, to match the frock with which the hat is worn, is sharing the popularity of black lace. Cire ribbon, which appears like a polished stove-pipe, is again in style. It is now used in colors to match the lace with which it is employed. A large lace hat for restaurant wear, the crown and brim of which are both fashioned of soft lace, has a band of wide ribbon around the crown and streamers of the same at one side. Cream colored lace shows a band of Chinese blue ribbon to be worn with a white frock. And there are such lovely color combinations as henna and brown, gray and coral, sea green and sand, and black with its accompanying ribbon of black satin.

Smart Styles In Footwear Are Displayed

New York, May 3.—Apropros of foot dress, there is a new model in shoes that is most attractive. It is shown in one of the smart shoe shops on the Avenue—a slender high-heeled sandal of the newest cut and made of one of the new Summer shades of sand, in kid. The novel feature of the shoe is that the kid is cut in narrow strips over the entire surface of the silk lining. The effect is very pretty, like that of tiny tucks, and the comfort of such a foot covering in warm weather may easily be imagined.

Bobbed Hair For Days; Long At Night

New York, May 3.—Bobbed hair has passed from its experimental and faddish stages and has become an accepted and powerful factor in feminine fashions. Talk of a reaction back to the mode of the Seven Sutherlands does not take into account the sanity and ease of the new coiffure—and any vogue that is predicated on milady's comfort is not easily dislodged. Despite all the ridiculous propaganda concerning imminent baldness and the like the bobbed head is here—and it is here to stay for a long, long time.

Yet bobbed hair is a severe test of the facial features, and every hesitant woman would do well to reflect carefully before adopting what may be an unbecoming style. For instance, a disproportioned head—one which is excessively broad, long, narrow or uneven—will only have its unlovely features accentuated if the shielding tresses are sheared The quality of the hair, too, has much to do with the attractiveness of the bobbed coiffure. Hair which is very scraggly, quite thin or extremely soft is not easily adaptable to the cropped style—the heavier, slightly coarse hair is a more effective medium.

There are several ways of achieving entirely different effects with similarly bobbed hair. One is the boyish bob with bangs across the front—and not much can be done with this type of bob. In another, however, which is cut slightly longer than the boyish bob, the hair is parted far toward one side and is then arranged by using a hair net and hairpins. Many different effects are achieved in this manner.

A third way is to have the hair bobbed yet manipulated to give the appearance of long tresses. It is combed toward the back, pinned securely, and the short locks, once the proudest part of the coiffure, are arranged at the back while the whole is covered with a net. The foresighted woman who has saved her cut tresses will find that her hair can be dressed for evening almost as beautifully as in the ante-bobbed days. Indeed, if the sides of the hair are long enough, even the boyish bob can be pulled across the back, held in place by fine hairpins, the uneven ends being hidden by the net.

There are many other becoming ways of dressing the detached hair, usually with the help of a net. This latter accessory is particularly helpful for the dinner or the dance, when the bobbed hair must be dressed in a more dignified manner, inasmuch as the short crop is not attractive with formal dress.

In the final analysis the problem to bob or not to bob has passed out of the hands of fashion. The day when the short-haired woman was an object of staring curiosity is gone—indeed, it is quite conceivable that the time is approaching when her longer haired sister will be a more unusual type. For the present at least there is no absolute dicta concerning the length of the hair and the question of which to choose hinges entirely on its attractiveness to the individual.

Attention Focussed On Blouses

New York.—The new blouses have come in for more than their allotted attention this season, due, of course, to the prevalence of the tailored vogue. A blouse is an essential to every suit, and the effectiveness of the tailleur in numerous instances depends largely upon the type of the accompanying waist.

Among the plainer effects which have come into prominence this spring are the pleated bosoms which end in tiny tabs like a man's shirt, and the waistcoat model, which is achieved by two front panels out-lined with narrow bindings and brought together by the aid of large pearl buttons. This latter type of blouse is seen in colored linen, organdie, tub silk and in voile combined with pique and linen. When the blouse material is soft, the front panels are developed in a heavier fabric to hold the shape of the waistcoat. Some show narrow bindings of delicately plaided ginghams, while many others complete the symbolism by displaying vest-like cross pieces at the waistline in the back.

A distinct novelty is a white silk blouse with a front of Roman striped silk, which is arranged horizontally, and a long matching scarf of the same materials. This waist is particulatly effective with the elaborate tailleur, and it has its practical element as well since it will be decidedly ornamental when warm weather compels the removal of the coat.

Something soft and frilly is encountered in a blouse boasting a fichu—the old-fashioned fichu of net edged with lace, which in this case is slipped through tabs buttoning over the front of the bodice. Matching cuffs placed over long sleeves, which are gathered at the wrist, complete a charming old-fashioned, poudre blue model.

The importance of the new blouses lies in the fact that they are the determining influences of the tailored costume. They play a dual role, exaggerating the mannish effect for the woman who prefers the plain coiffure and the rigid boyish lines and mitigating the severity of the new styles for her who refuses to succumb to the lure of the mode garcon.

THREE WAYS OF BOBBING

Above are illustrated three ways of dressing bobbed hair. Left, the boyish bob. Center, the hair cut slightly longer, parted far to one side, and held in place by a hair-net. Right, hair combed toward back with cut-off tresses reinstated.

Traveling Costumes Seen In Paris

Styles Reflect New Nomadic Tendencies Of French Womankind

Recent years have witnessed a distinct change in the disposition of the hearth-loving Frenchwoman, who has developed tendencies quite as nomadic as those of her British and American sisters. There was a time, when, to the Parisienne, travel was a disagreeable necessity, to be indulged in only when the exigencies of the social season demanded it. The outdoor aspect of a steamer or motor trip was ever so distant from her conception of pleasure.

However, the dramatic athletic triumphs of Lenglen, the enthusiastic following of Carpentier and the elevation of "le boxe" to a function of social importance have all combined to discover new veins in the temperament of the versatile Parisienne, who has begun to take a vigorous part in outdoor activities. Tennis, cross-country and even boxing have been espoused by Mademoiselle, and the wide open spaces have finally come into their own. Long motor trips, trans-Atlantic voyages and aerial journeys have all become intrinsic parts of the social program of the fashionable demoiselle.

The result upon the collections of the important French salons is as evident as it was natural. Where once the traveling frock made only an occasional spasmodic appearance, today every Paris couturier exhibits clothes which are definitely and distinctly intended for motoring and the steamer.

The typical French trans-Atlantic outfit consists of one knitted and one wool dress adapted for wear on the steamer, a tailored dress to be worn for ordinary occasions such as sightseeing and street wear, a silk dress, preferably in some dark shade, and at least two evening dresses. The number of evening dresses will vary according to the itinerary of the trip. A coat patterned on sports is absolutely essential for the steamer, for bad weather or for any rough traveling.

No less than three hats should be taken. There should be one sports hat of soft felt, an informal afternoon hat, preferably with a matching scarf, and at least one chapeau to accompany the more formal types of costume. Three or more pairs of shoes should also be included in this wardrobe—a pair of low-heeled sports shoes, a pair of shoes suitable for afternoon wear and slippers for the dinner and the dance. Underthings must be light and of the easily washable type. Three or four pairs of gloves complete the minimum wardrobe for the steamer trip.

Two essentials that would be badly missed if not included in the outfit are the Baedeker and the kodak. Another convenient article which will be in frequent use is a large purse of the envelope type, to contain the always necessary passport and the equally essential letters of credit.

For the motor or train trip no such elaborate outfit is required, and the size of the wardrobe is dictated by the extent and the character of the contemplated journey.

One wrap is of blue serge and it has a detachable lining of bright red silk. When the outer portion is removed the wearer is revealed in a striking silk garment, once the lining of the coat. When the temperature becomes lower the coat is again put on and the erstwhile silk robe becomes once more a vivid lining for the cloak.

An effective steamer coat is from Beer. Across the front of the coat, which is developed in Scotch plaid, are four pointed godets, giving movement and fullness to an otherwise quite straight silhouette. The very necessary scarf effect is achieved by having one end of the collar continue until it simulates this important accessory to the spring mode.

Particularly attracting is a Rechoff auto or steamer coat fashioned from one of Rodier's new woolen tissues, in a dull red shade. The modish touch on this costume is a matching hat encircled with a red crepe scarf which is either draped around the neck or else is permitted to trail at the back.

An excellent traveling dress which may be packed in the trunk without fear of its becoming wrinkled is by Patou—and it is one of those fortunate children that has been given the distinction of a name—Florina. It is developed from one of Patou's new wool shawls, the pattern of which is beige and brown. The cut is identical in front and back and emphasises the typical, straigh silhouette. The dress is sleeveless and has a low waistline and a square cut neck. Bright red mat beads form a right angle embroidery design which starts at the waist and continues down the right side of the dress.

A suit may easily take the place of either one of the afternoon dresses in the ocean traveling outfit, or, if preferred, a cross between a dress and suit—such as the Chanel model of black and white wool plaid. This dress, when viewed from the back, has the appearance of a coat, while the front gives the impression of a tailored suit accompanied by a white blouse. The back is in one piece and hangs perfectly straight, the lines being unbroken save for a black leather belt. The front, which is quite without means of fastening, is cut in jacket form and has a revere collar, a bodice of white crepe de chine and deep pouch pockets. Buttons run down the entire length of the straight and narrow skirt.

The keynote of the traveler's outfit is conservatism. While all clothes of the journey embody the newest ideas, they carefully shun any hint of the bizarre. The guiding principle for the expectant voyager is to dress in Rome as the Romans do.

A Glider Record

A new model German glider, provided with a seven-horse power motorcycle motor, set a new record when it flew 690 miles, keeping an altitude of 3,400 feet and covering the distance in five and one-half hours.

Edison's Wonder-Shop

Edison keeps his shop supplied with everything an inventor could possibly want, a fact in which he has always taken considerable pride. He once offered a prize of $10 to any of his assistants who would need in their work an article not in the shop. The man who took the prize wanted a clothespin.

Smart Frocks Are Offered For Children

Among the style creations for Spring the very little girl has not been forgotten. There is a delightful array of cunning frocks for her special proportions. Among them one finds the sophisticated materials of her grown-up sister's clothes, made up in frocks to suit her own miniature figure.

Navy serge shows a tiny box jacket and pleated skirt. There is a white silk blouse tailored like mother's but showing a row of small pearl buttons down the front. For practical wear, this style is excellent for the child as the jacket may be removed when the thermometer makes its wearing a discomfort. The blouse may also be readily tubbed.

Any number of clever frocks are made up of challis. It comes now in plaids and stripes as well as in those delightful flower patterns we first knew. With the addition of colored ribbons, a lace yoke and pleatings of the challis material, a clever and becoming frock may be designed.

China silk is to play an important part in the juvenile styles this year. It is such a cool material and can be laundered so readily that mothers are accepting it gladly for their children's clothes. Bloomer suits of pantalettes and over-frock are developed of this sheer fabric. One finds plenty of the dressier models for party wear in the smart shops which cater to the needs of the very little miss.

An open smile

Pretty teeth often form a woman's chief attraction. Countless women get them now by removing film.

What Women Lose By Dingy Teeth

—Why do it?

Dingy teeth rob women of a major charm. Not beauty only, but that added grace which lies in the open smile.

Millions of women have found a way to whiter teeth, also to better protection. You meet them everywhere today—with teeth you envy, maybe.

Will you not learn how they get them—by this delightful test?

Due to film

That viscous film you feel on teeth is what clouds them. And it often wrecks them. It clings to teeth, gets between the teeth and stays.

Food stains, etc., discolor it, then it forms dingy coats. Tartar is based on film.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acids. It holds the acids in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. Thus most tooth troubles are now traced to that unsightly film.

Ways to end it

Tooth troubles were increasing until very few escaped. So dental science sought for ways to fight that film. In time two ways were found. One acts to curdle film, one to remove it, and without any harmful scouring.

Able authorities proved those methods. Then a new-type tooth paste was created, based on modern research. Those two great film combatants were embodied in it.

The name of that tooth paste is Pepsodent. Careful people of some 50 nations now employ it daily, largely by dental advice.

What must be done

Research also proved two other things essential. So Pepsodent multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva. That is there to neutralize mouth acids, the cause of tooth decay. It multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva. That is there to digest starch deposits which may otherwise ferment and form acids.

Old-time tooth pastes, it was found, seriously diminished those great tooth-protecting agents in the mouth.

Watch it act

Use Pepsodent for ten days. See for yourself what it does. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coats disappear.

Then decide by what you see and feel. Judge what is best for you and yours. Cut out the coupon so you won't forget.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

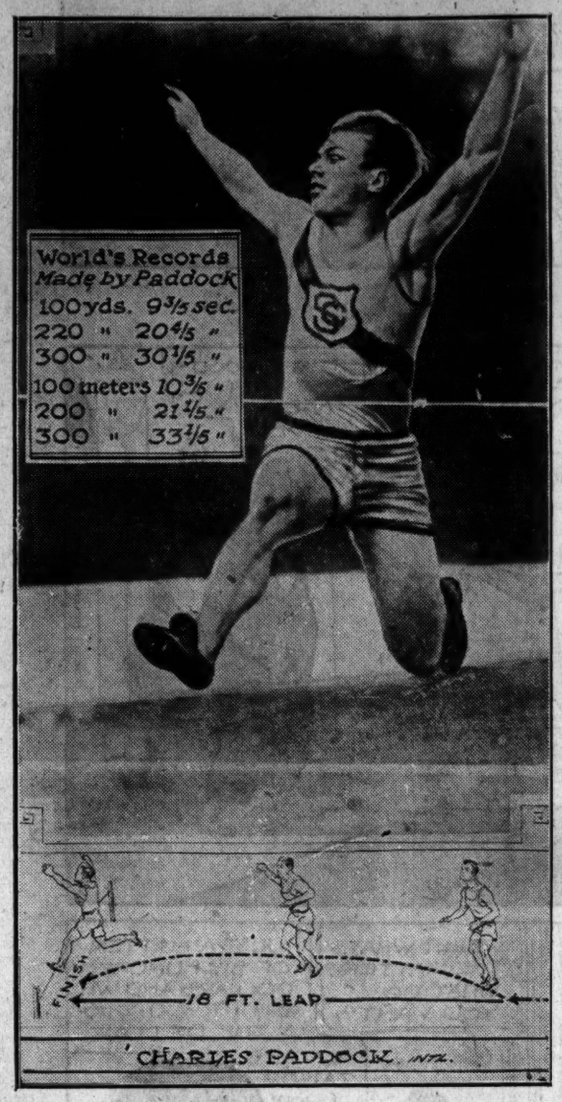
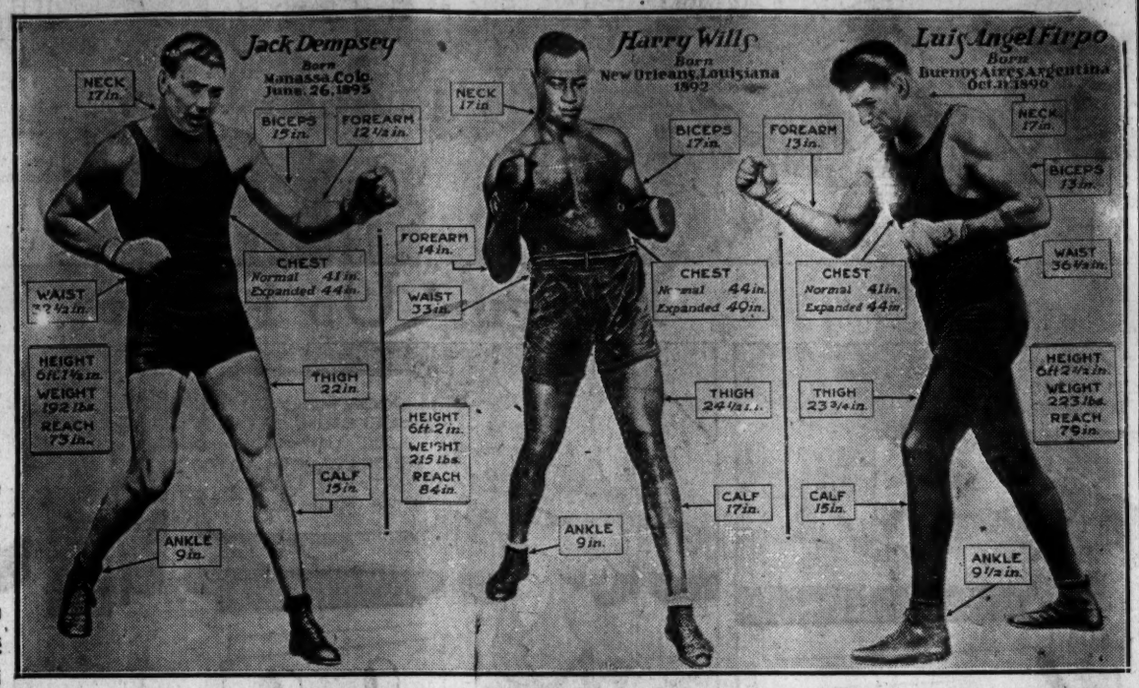
SPORT NEWS OF THE WORLD IN PICTURES

美國著名賽跑家潘達克行將代表美國赴巴黎參與夏令配克運動會云 CHARLIE PADDOCK AND HIS FLYING FINISH



This photograph and diagram describe graphically how Charlie Paddock, the Pacific Coast champion, one of the greatest sprinters of all time, makes his sensational finishes. Paddock, who will be one of the American aces in the Olympic games in Paris, makes a flying leap to breast the tape, taking off 18 feet from the finish and breaking many world records.

本年世界角力中之三大力士白郎伯賽白韋爾司白飛浦 DEMPSEY, WILLS AND FIRPO MAY FIGHT FOR WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP THIS YEAR.



Although Luis Angel Firpo, the Wild Bull of the Pampas, is still in Buenos Aires, selling automobiles and reasserting he will never enter the prize ring again, it is known that he is angling for a lot of loose money in the movies, and that the producers have told him he would be of no film value unless he fights. Sporting men in New York are confident he will fight Harry Wills, the New Orleans "Black Panther," the winner to meet Jack Dempsey, the Manassa Mauler, for the world's championship. This graphic layout shows how the three men size up. Both Firpo and Wills are larger and heavier than the title holder.

During the World War he was head boxing coach for the entire A. E. F., and coached the victorious American boxing team in the Brussels Olympics.

H. J. Grieser, coach of the famous Red, White and Blue squad of Panama Canal Zone swimmers, is shown here with two of his proteges who seem to be assured of places of the American Olympic swimming team. Josephine McKim is the greatest girl swimmer of her age and holds several world's records. Landon Gunn, the 16-year-old boy champion, holds records from 220 yards to a mile.

哈佛大學生中之日本運動家 Japanese Is Catcher on Harvard Nine.

Mrs. Laura Lanham, of Bloomington, Ill., is recognized as the champion woman horseshoe pitcher. After issuing a challenge to meet all comers, Mrs. Lanham has gone into Spring training at her home. She is a left hand twirler and tosses the equine boots on the regulation 40-foot court, instead of using the 30-foot throw used by many women. Mrs. Lanham prefers to match her skill against men on their own home grounds.
